EX-GOV. STOKES TALKED TO MEN

New Jersey's Former Executive Addressed a Large Audience at the Baptist Church.

On Sunday afternoon, March 12, ex-Governor E. C. Stokes, of New Jersey, addressed an audience of 315 men at the men's meeting at the Bristol Baptist Church. The Men's Meeting Glee Club rendered several fine selections. His subject was "Lincoln, the Man and Christian." His address in full was as follows:

GOV. STOKES' ADDRESS.

As your pastor suggests, I am indeed glad to share with you in these exercises this afternoon, although, as has been intimated, I am here not altogether as a volunteer, but more as a conscript, but you know your pastor better than I do and you can understand that when he once starts after a man, the best thing to do is to come down out of the tree and do as he wants.

I have enjoyed your singing this afternoon, heartfelt and sincere, and I want to congratulate you and your pastor as I look over this scene, upon this improvement. I am for the uplift and welfare of man, and after all the things that count in this world are the things we do for our fellows.

When I was in college, I had a classmate, a country boy, who looked like a country boy, but who had the spirit of inspiration. He turned out afterward to be a poet, Samuel W. Foss, one of the poets of the people and he sat down and wrote these lines. I am going to quote them to you just two stanzas that come to me as I look over this audience:—

There are hermit souls that dwell apart in their place of self-content.
There are souls like stars, that dwell afar, in the fathomless firmament.
There are grand souls that blaze the way where paths are never run,
But let me dwell by the side of the road and be a friend to man.

Let me dwell in a house by the side of a road where the race of men go by The men who are go the men who are sad, as good as as bad as I.
Then why should I sit in the scorner's seat or hurl the cynic's bitter word
Let me dwell in a house by the side of the road and be a friend of man.

And as I look over this scene this afternoon, it seems to me that your pastor is to be congratulated in getting you together. It is an inspiration to look into a gathering of men like this, even if your better halves are not with you. When I was a boy, a Quaker boy, before I became a politician, I used to go to a Quaker church. The women were seated on one side of the Meeting house as we called it, there, and the men on the other side, and that division was faithfully observed as you observe it here and I assume that the women come to church in the morning and the men in the afternoon.

I feel perfectly at home in this place. I was born in this State of Pennsylvania, down in Philadelphia, and as a Jerseyman, I have seen one of your neighbors for years, and you know New Jersey tenders some considerable service to the State of Pennsylvania, for, years, that little State of ours, something which so much fun is made, has ac ed as a bulwark to keep the Atlantic ocean from washing away the shores of the old Keystone State, so this afternoon, as I come here from this helpful State of ours, I come, not only as a prodigal returned to his home, but as a friend and a neighbor. I have another reason for feeling at home this afternoon; I have been walking about your little town here and looking at your homes, and I judge from what I have seen that this is a place where men work.

Now I come from a little town down in South Jersey where men work, where the chain we have not a single man of leisure to walk the streets, where everyone except the aged or the sick or the infirm, works for his or for her living, and I am going to talk to you this afternoon about a man whose life is an inspiration because of the work he began among the low lies of the lowly, and he sat in the seats of the mighties.

I want you to come back with me, not very long ago by the old town of yours, something like a hundred years ago. The Republic had just then started. There were only seventeen States. There was not a railroad or an electric light or a telegraph. They were all to come from my little State of New Jersey. Not a single steamboat had stirred the waters of the rivers of the West. That was to come later from New Jersey also, for the first steam boat in this country, aye, in the world, plied its waters here upon the Delaware. Thomas Jefferson had just about left the Presidential chair and it was only eight years since, had the charters of Louisiana, he had, with a single stride, stepped from the Mississippi to the Pacific and it was only about eighteen years since the invention of the cotton gin had stimulated the growth of cotton and with it the growth of slavery.

In this age, in the wilds of the Kentucky woods, famous for the romance of Boone and Crocket, in a cabin without windows or door or floor, a boy was born. He was without a cradle. He had no godfathers but poverty, no inheritance but hardship, but over his lowly birthplace there hung the star of destiny, for you know Emerson says that this land of America is the land of opportunity, and though men knew it not, this boy was to be the master of the new world and they called him Abraham Lincoln. He was a child of the woods. He drank in their fragrance and their purity, their silence and their noise, and from them he gathered knowledge and courage and self reliance.

Nature tested him well. He walked the pathway of sorrow from boyhood to manhood. He lost mother and sister in his early years. He worked on a flatboat at the age of eight. He lived for a whole year in a three faced cabin, one side exposed to the storm and weather. He suffered all hardship. He was glad to earn $10 a month and I never heard he complained of high prices and on one occasion he split fourteen hundred rails for a single pair of trousers. He never had more than a year's schooling in his life time and he had no such schools as we have, for in his time schools were rude cabins with teachers who boarded out and one of the teachers of that age said he boarded in a house consisting of a single room sixteen-foot square, tenanted by a man and his wife, ten children, three dogs and two cats.

Aside from this, Lincoln's schooling was secured largely in his moments of respite from work and his hours by the fire at night, with a shovel for a blackboard and a jack knife for an eraser and a piece of charcoal for a pencil. And yet this man, in spite of his educational disadvantages, became a master of the English tongue. Emerson, himself a type of the highest, purest English, ranks him as a master. Upon the walls of Oxford College, England, there hangs a letter which he wrote to a bereaved mother who had given her five sons to the Republic, as a specimen of the finest English ever written. There it hangs, in a place of honor above the the cultured schooling and culture of the ages, for Oxford University is six centuries old. It has been the center of literary men. From it have come generations of great men, churchmen and scientists, such men as Pitt, the statesman; Johnson, the lexicographer; Fox, the churchman, and Ruskin, the writer, and yet this University in these six centuries of piled up learning, reaches its hand across the Atlantic and puts the laurel crown upon the brow of this backwoods American of the West, as the master of the purest English ever printed. Upon the lower wall as this picture, a King is making of his crown a chain and by his side a slave is making of his chain a crown and underneath is this inscription, "Our lives are what we make them, no matter of what they are made." And so Abraham Lincoln ever illustrates the possibility of American opportunity and shows what can be accomplished by every boy or girl of honest faith and ambition. If Lincoln, in spite of his early disadvantages, could reach the highest place in this land, what may we not expect of the boy and girl of today with their advantages of schools and churches and seminaries and colleges. Now let me not be misunderstood. Lincoln's honest life with its lack of schooling is none the less a plea for education. He proved himself able to overcome the early disadvantages of life. He walked forty four miles to get a copy of a certain book and he read one hundred pages of it as he walked back. His appetite for knowledge was insatiable. Now a university doesn't consist simply of four walls and shelves of books. It consists of the educational spirit embodied in man. You remember someone said once that a college consisted of a log with a student at one end and Mark Hopkins at the other. And so Abraham Lincoln kneeling by the light of that open fire at night and reading those books of his for information, depicts that desire for knowledge and that mental discipline from which schools and colleges and seminaries spring.

Now, he was a man of few books You remember what they were, Bunyon's Pilgrim's Progress, Aesop's Fables, Life of Washington History of the United States, the Bible, and later Shakespeare. This practically completed his library, but he knew these books thoroughly, and knowing a few books thoroughly, he was better equipped than his competitors who knew many books superficially. He illustrates. It seems to me, that power of concentration that comes from the mastery of a subject, for whatever he did, he did thoroughly and well. The Superintendent of compulsory education at Chicago has in his possession a thousand volumes taken from juvenile offenders, which tell an appalling story of the kind of literature upon which those unfortunates feast and the source whence they derive their first knowledge of wrong-doing and crime. One of the greatest evils of the land is light and superficial reading. It not only demoralizes the mind, but it weakens it and unfits it for classical reading and logical conclusion. A picture that you put before the man makes the man or the boy, and if I had the power to be a reformer. I suppose you have reformers in Pennsylvania, and could enforce my decree. I would cut out from the magazines and the newspapers of this day every reference to the lurid, lovely and crime and wrong doing, and immorality and divorce. I would keep that and that came before the American people clean and pure I would have them think of right things and right deeds and good men and good women, rather than mean things and evil deeds and bad men and bad women. I had a protege at one time, and that boy could unlock any lock I ever saw, without knowing the combination. He had a criminal instinct, but he always managed to escape the law. He came to see me one time and during the visit he said to me, "Did you see in one of the greatest New York papers) that account of the way to rob a bank and open a safe? Well," he said "It was wonderfully correct, but it will do a vast deal of harm, because it will show boys how to do that thing who would not know and would never think of it."

And so, if you keep your ideals high, and if you talk about good things and speak of the good things, you will rear up a race of good boys and girls

I don't know whether you have ever read the legend of "The Great Stone Face," or not. It tells the effect of an ideal upon the life of a boy very marked. As the boy goes out from his cottage home, he sees the great image that appears to him all that is great and good in human character, and seeing it often he grows to like it, growing to like it, he becomes like it. Such is always the influence of comradeship with the great and good.

Lincoln was not one of the advocates of that miserable, hypocritical philosophy which holds that you must know something in order to order to avoid it. The books he read were moral, instructive and uplifting and upon this as a foundation was laid a character fit for the noblest crown.

It is a little difficult to tell when the American type of man appeared in this country. We are a cosmopolitan people. We consist of all races, Russian, and Polish, Hungarian and Austrian, French, German and Spanish and English and some Americans. Now the signers of the Declaration and the officers who commanded the armies of the Revolution, in their buff and blue and high boots, were for the most part, English gentlemen. Washington was a regular English country squire, and Hamilton was noted for his aristocratic bearing and your old Benjamin Franklin, of Philadelphia, was an idol of the ladies and graced the Court of France as though he had been born among her nobles. Brave men they were, but don't forget they were men of powdered wigs and silver shoe buckles and knee breeches, and they were of the lordly type. They did not understand democracy as you and I understand it. That type had not then appeared. Events were rapidly culminating to that point about camp fire, day by day, and the principles of American life were coming to the test. The aristocracy was the first point, the right of one man to own the labor of another man was too much to pass the principle of equality as defined in the Declaration.

Now this is the way Lincoln put it. He said that ever since the dawn of Christianity two principles had been in contest. One was the divine right of Kings and the other the right of humanity and it was the same thing no matter what form it assumed. It was the principle which said, "You work and labor and earn in sweat your bread and I will eat it." Society imposed a few slaves for the benefit of humanity when the Republic was born, but they left shackles upon the limbs of men. They never intended that slavery should be permanent. Lincoln proves that in his famous union speech in '30. Of the framers of the Constitution, he finds a record of twenty-three and our of twenty-three, twenty-one voted against slavery, and Jefferson said that the Virginians could not invoke the name of God while trading in slaves, and one of the early fathers drew the line where he said the black slave should forever stay. But slavery grew and increased. In his Kansas debates, Lincoln's idea had been altogether American. He said, down in Independence Hall, "I have no sentiment politicat that doesn't spring from a Declaration which grants, not only to the people of this country, but to the world, liberty for all time to come, and if this country cannot be saved without sacrificing that principle, I would rather be assassinated on the spot than surrender."

In 1858 came the Lincoln-Douglas debates. Douglas was one of the leading men in his party and a candidate for his party and the willingness of Abraham Lincoln to cope with this young gentleman of the West marked him as a rising man. Lincoln (always for the Declaration which preached equality) in answering some of Douglas' scornful thrusts, said, "I know of no reason why the black man is not entitled to all the rights of the Declaration, life, liberty and pursuit of happiness. He may never be Judge Douglas' equal in many respects, he may not equal many others in mentality and morals, but in the right to eat the bread which his own hand makes, without asking anyone else's permission, in that he is my equal, Douglas' equal, and the equal of any living man When a man governs himself, that is self-government, but when he dares to govern someone else without that man's consent, that is despotism."

You say this is a trite remark, but it required courage to say it these days. They were the days when Lloyd Garrison was dragged through the streets of cultured Boston with a rope around his neck by an unruly mob, for the offensive of such sentiments and they were the days when Lovejoy was killed while defending his printing press against rioters, because he printed anti-slavery sentiments. And in this atmosphere Lincoln uttered that famous message which brought the North face to face with itself. "A house divided against itself cannot stand. I do not believe this Union can endure half slaves and half free. I do not expect to see the house fall. I do not expect to see the Union divide, but I expect to see it cease to remain separate." The battle was given this first Great American, as Lowell characterizes him, and then came a storm which fight of that open fire at night and reading those books of his for information, depicts that desire for knowledge and that mental discipline from which schools and colleges and seminaries spring

Now, he was a man of few books You remember what they were, Bunyon's Pilgrim's Progress, Aesop's Fables, Life of Washington History of the United States, the Bible, and later Shakespeare. LETTER FROM DOYLESTOWN

Gazette Correspondent Reviews the News Field at the County Seat.

ANNEXATION TALK

Capt. McReynolds, of Company G Selected to Go to Texas to Observe Military Conditions---Review of News Field.

Doylestown, March 22.

Annexation is still the ruling topic of conversation and even acrid discussion, at the county seat. In an attempt to please everybody borough council formulated a plan that pleases nobody. Pieces of land are carved out, by this plan, at irregular intervals and annexed to the borough. In one case a man owns a number of houses on land adjoining the borough that were built with the expectancy of obtaining borough advantages, which were refused them. These houses are to be taken in but the remaining building lots, on which he promised to build, if they were taken into the borough were carefully excluded. At another point a long, narrow strip is run out into the township so that one man may be able to get borough water. Popular opinion demands a revision of these crooked lines and the taking in of more available building sites but a certain few seem to have a sufficiently strong pull to keep certain tracts on the outside just as they have in the past.

The county seat has, perhaps, more owneriess canines than any other place in the State, that is no one owns them when the assessor makes his round, and perhaps fewer that pay tax. Last year but twenty-five were the proper tag so borough council on Monday night, in consequence of numerous complaints of dogs attacking horses, went through their annual farce of ordering that a dog catcher be employed and unless more horses are killed this will end it for another year and the assessors will find fewer dogs than they found last year. Another important matter before council was the removal of the Advance Building, at Shewell avenue, right in the centre of the town, for which the County Commissioners are to pay when they get the money and there are no more bridges to build, which will probably be when this year's fancies come in.

Water metres, which have taken up a good deal of councils time, are now to be installed but only at such places where there is reason to believe that the consumers are paying for a much smaller quantity than they use or where the consumer is thought to be wasting water. Altogether council had a very important, if not a harmonious, meeting and actually accomplished something.

The political situation remains unchanged, discussions are few and far between, and no new candidates have announced themselves. The primarily still hangs on the tree awaiting a shake by the right man and although it is said that there are a number of candidates, no one is willing to name any one. That Council will select a man on the west side of the county seems to be universally conceded, but so far, the men selected have not responded to the call and the nomination still goes a begging. It is rumored that a County Treasurer has been decided upon, but that it is not deemed advisable to make it public at this time, just what the reason for this is, is not known at present, but is in Bristol.

When words fail to express their feelings on annexation, or the argument becomes too heated, the average citizen turns to base ball. Manager Kelly has been quietly at work and strengthened up all the weak spots in last year's team and is practically sure of the pennant in the North Penn League this year. Joe Eldridge, who pitched Perkasie to victory last year, will be seen with a county seat uniform on this year and will play a better game than he did last year. Kelly always has a surprise or two up his sleeve and when he lets them loose the fans go wild with enthusiasm. The county seat wins this year. Practice will start about the middle of next month and then base ball will be the only topic. We sure have a team of winners this year, and only bad luck can defeat us.

School Director Robert S Garner, of Doylestown, was stricken by a stroke of apoplexy, Sunday morning, and died instantaneously at the home of his son-in-law, J. Freeman Bondricks, on West Court street on Monday o'clock. Some weeks ago he suffered the first serious illness of his unusually active life, but recently appeared to be recovering his health and strength. His death was not wholly a surprise to his immediate family as they had been informed by his physician that he would very likely pass away in such a sudden manner, but it was a distinct shock to his many friends.

He was seen by his grandson about 6 o'clock and appeared to be as well as usual. Later he came down stairs before the other members of the household and, as there was a morning paper on the kitchen table and other things had been done there, it is supposed he was going about as usual when he went to lie down on the lounge in the dining room. About 9 o'clock his grandson went into the room and found him lying on the floor beside the lounge dead.

Mr. Garner was one of the best known men in the county seat and was well known over the county. He was a man of more than average ability and, besides being a member of the school board, was active in politics for many years and a very prominent in Odd Fellowship.

At one time or another he held a deputyship in nearly every office in the Row and in emergencies was called on to help nearly every officer, regardless of politics. For many years past he has been one of the two men to compute the vote after each election and was very remarkable for his accuracy. The funeral, held on Wednesday, was a very large one and was in charge of Aquetong Lodge, No. 198, I. O. O. F., of which he was secretary for many years and for which he worked in and out of season. He will be very much missed at the county seat.

The county seat will be ably represented at the scene of the present unpleasantness between our neighbors in Mexico. Captain Abel MacReynolds, of Company, National Guards, is one of the 25th officers selected from this State to go to Texas and observe the conditions there as well as the proper way to handle a large army in detail. The Captain is one of the best officers in the Guard and no better selection could have been made by those in authority.

The promoters of a hospital for the county seat are not making much noise at the present time over their plans, but are devoting their time and energy to working up a good and healthy public sentiment in its favor. When they start out to raise money for this purpose they will be surprised at the small amount of persuasion they will have to use and the large amount of money they will be able to collect. The time has arrived when a hospital at the county seat is an absolute necessity not so much for the accommodation of Doylestown as for the surrounding country. As at present planned the hospital will not be in Doylestown, but near it and easily accessible both by train and trolley.

No serious efforts have been made to ascertain the cause of the fire in the Court House steeple some two weeks ago. Had it broken out at night there might have been a story of burned records to tell that would have caused consternation among the people of the whole county. It may have been, probably was, an accident, but even at that precautions should be taken to guard against similar accidents. On the floor below, guarded by two very dry, inflammable wooden doors, is the opening to the loft over the public offices and that the fire would surely have crept in there is beyond doubt. This week the damage is being repaired by new wood work where there should be iron.

A quieter month than this one has not been known at the county seat for many years. The spring business is coming on slow and if it was not for the fact that at the beginning of the week advantage was taken of the fine weather and several families moved from one home to another, we would not have known that Spring was really here. So far there has been nothing in the weather conditions to justify the belief and even that exceedingly busy place, in the spring, the Recorder's office, is not overburdened with work.

Officer A. R. Atkinson, of Doylestown, arrived at the Bucks county jail Friday morning, with Jonas Gares, an inmate of the Soldiers' Home at Erie, who is charged with having set fire to the home of his wife and child, Clarence Carverville on the night of February 17th. It is believed to be one of the most important arrests of recent years and was brought about through the clever detective work of Officer Atkinson with the assistance of District Attorney William C. Ryan.

On the night of February 17th Mrs. Gares, whose husband had deserted her and her children two years before, was aroused by a shouting outside and found the house full of smoke. With her 20-years-old son and 15-years-old daughter she went down stairs and found the door and side of the house afire.

Buckets of water extinguished the blaze and then it was found that a determined attempt had been made to burn the property.

Outside in a corner formed by the door, the step and the frame, was found an oil-saturated piece of carpet and a bundle of paper with a glass insulator holding it. Nearby was found an oil can.

Starting with information that Gares had told a neighbor on one occasion that he would like to burn up his wife, District Attorney Ryan was sure of Gares guilt of the crime and with the assistance of Officer Atkinson built up the trail and with the aid of the detective got evidence which traced Gares to the old home on the night of the fire. It was at first thought Gares might have gone to West Nazareth where he had been, on the night, but this and other conjectures proved to be wrong. It was learned in Doylestown that he was here on the night of the fire. A team from a livery and returned at midnight. Further inquiry showed that after getting off the train here he went to Barrett's hardware store, bought the oil can and had it filled with oil.

A telegram to the Soldiers' Home showed that Gares had been given a furlough and as soon as he returned this week District Attorney Ryan was notified. Officer Atkinson went there and arrested him.

It was—I hadn't got to shave,
I'd shaved myself last night!

EX-GOV. STOKES TALKED TO MEN

New Jersey's Former Executive Addressed a Large Audience at the Baptist Church.

On Sunday afternoon, March 12, ex-Governor E. C. Stokes, of New Jersey, addressed an audience of 315 men at the men's meeting at the Bristol Baptist Church. The Men's Meeting Glee Club rendered several fine selections. His subject was "Lincoln, the Man and Christian." His address in full was as follows:

GOV. STOKES' ADDRESS.

As your pastor suggests, I am indeed glad to share with you in these exercises this afternoon, although, as has been intimated, I am here not altogether as a volunteer, but more as a conscript, but you know your pastor better than I do and you can understand that when he once starts after a man, the best thing to do is to come down out of the tree and do as he wants.

I have enjoyed your singing this afternoon, heartfelt and sincere, and I want to congratulate you and your pastor, as I look over this scene, upon this movement. I am for the uplift and welfare of man, and after all the things that count in this world are the things we do for our fellows.

When I was in college, I had a classmate, a country boy, who looked like a country boy, but who had the spirit of inspiration. He turned out afterward to be a poet, Samuel W. Foss, one of the poets of the people and he sat down and wrote these lines. I am going to quote them to you just two stanzas that occur to me as I look over this audience:—

There are hermit souls that dwell apart in their place of self-content.
There are souls like stars, that dwell afar, in the fathomless firmament.
There are pioneer souls that blaze the way where pathways never ran,
But let me dwell by the side of the road and be a friend to man.

Let me dwell in a house by the side of a road where the race of men go by
The men who are good, the men who are bad, as good and as bad as I.
Then why should I sit in the scorner's seat or hurl the cynic's ban?
Let me dwell in a house by the side of the road and be a friend of man.

And as I look over this scene this afternoon, it seems to me that your pastor is to be congratulated in getting you together. It is an inspiration to look into a gathering of men like this, even if your better halves are not with you. When I was a boy, a Quaker boy, before I became a politician, I used to go to a Quaker church. The women were seated on one side of the Meeting house as we called it then, and the men on the other side, and that division was faithfully observed I see you observe it here and I assume that the women come to church in the morning and the men in the afternoon.

I feel perfectly at home in this place. I was born in this State of Pennsylvania, down in Philadelphia, and as a Jerseyman, I have been one of your neighbors for years, and you know New Jersey renders some considerable service to the State of Pennsylvania. Why, for years, that little State of ours, concerning which so much fun is made, has acted as a bulwark to keep the Atlantic ocean from washing away the shores of the old Keystone State, so this afternoon, as I come here from this helpful State of ours, I come, not only as a prodigal returned to his home, but as a friend and a neighbor. I have another reason for feeling at home this afternoon; I have been walking about your little town here and looking at your homes, and I judge from what I have seen that this is a place where men work.

Now I come from a little town down in South Jersey where men work, where they claim we have not a single man of leisure to walk the streets, where everyone except the aged or the sick or the infirm, works for his or her living, and I am going to talk to you this afternoon about a man whose life is an inspiration because of the work he began among the lowliest of the lowly, and he sat in the seats of the mightiest.

I want you to come back with me, not very long ago by this old town of yours, something like a hundred years ago The Republic had just then started. There were only seventeen States. There was not a railroad or an electric light or a telegraph. They were all to come from my little State of New Jersey. Not a single steam boat had stirred the waters of the rivers of the West. That was to come later from New Jersey also, for the first steam boat in this country, aye, in the world, plied its wheels here upon the Delaware. Thomas Jefferson had just about left the Presidential chair and it was only eight years since, by the charters of Louisiana, he had, with a single stride, stepped from the Mississippi to the Pacific and it was only about eighteen years since the invention of the cotton gin had stimulated the growth of cotton and with it the growth of slavery.

In this age, in the wilds of the Kentucky woods, famous for the prowess of Boone and Crocket, in a cabin without windows or door or floor, a boy was born. He was without a cradle. He had no godfather but poverty, no inheritance but hardship, but over his lowly birthplace there hung the star of destiny, for you know Emerson says that this land of America is the land of opportunity, and though men knew it not, this boy was to be the master of the new world, and they called him Abraham Lincoln. He was a child of the woods. He drank in their fragrance and their purity, their silence and their noise, and from them he gathered knowledge and courage and self reliance.

Nature tested him well. He walked the pathway of sorrow from boyhood to manhood. He lost … and sister in his early years. … a flatboat at the age of … for a whole year in a th… in, one side exposed to … weather …

He was glad to earn $10 a … never heard he complain… prices and on one occasion … split fourteen hundred rails for a single pair of trousers. He never had more than a year's schooling in his life time and he had no such schools as we have, for in his time schools were rude cabins with teachers who boarded out and one of the teachers of that age said he boarded in a house consisting of a single room sixteen-foot square, tenanted by a man and his wife, ten children, three dogs and two cats.

Aside from this, Lincoln's schooling was secured largely in his moments of respite from work and his hours by the fire at night, with a shovel for a blackboard and a jack knife for an eraser and a piece of charcoal for a pencil. And yet this man, in spite of his educational disadvantages, became master of the English tongue. Emerson, himself a type of the highest, finest English, ranks him as a master. Upon the walls of Oxford College, England, there hangs a letter which he wrote to a bereaved mother who had given her five sons to the Republic, as a specimen of the finest English ever written. There it hangs, in a place of honor above the the combined schooling and culture of the …, for Oxford University is six centuries old. It has been the center of … men. From it have come … of great men, churchmen and scientists, such men as Pitt, the …man; Johnson, the lexicographer, …, the churchman, and Ruskin, … and yet this University in … six centuries of piled up … reaches its hand across the … and … the laurel crown upon the brow of this backwoods American of the West, as the master of the purest English ever printed. Upon the lower wall is this picture, a King is making of his crown a chain and by his side a slave is making of his chain a crown and underneath is this inscription, 'Our lives are what we make them, no matter of what they are made.' And so Abraham Lincoln ever illustrates the possibility of American opportunity and shows what can be accomplished by every boy or girl of honest faith and ambition. If Lincoln, in spite of his early disadvantages, could reach the highest place in this land, what may we not expect of the boy and girl of today with their advantages of schools and churches and seminaries and colleges. Now let me not be misunderstood. Lincoln's honest life with its lack of schooling is none the less a plea for education. He proved himself able to overcome the early disadvantages of life. He walked forty four miles to get a copy of a certain book and he read one hundred pages of it as he walked back. His appetite for knowledge was insatiable. Now a university doesn't consist simply of four walls and shelves of books. It consists of the educational spirit embodied in man You remember someone said once that a college consisted of a log with a student at one end and Mark Hopkins at the other. And so Abraham Lincoln kneeling by the light of that open fire at night and reading those books of his for information, depicts that desire for knowledge and that mental discipline from which schools and colleges and seminaries spring.

Now, he was a man of few books You remember what they were, Bunyon's Pilgrim's Progress, Aesop's Fables, Life of Washington History of the United States, the Bible, and later Shakespeare. This practically completed his library, but he knew these books thoroughly, and knowing a few books thoroughly, he was better equipped than his competitors who knew many books superficially He illustrates, it seems to me, that power of concentration that comes from the mastery of a subject, for whatever he did, he did thoroughly and well. The Superintendent of compulsory education at Chicago has in his possession a thousand volumes taken from juvenile offenders, which tell an appalling story of the kind of literature upon which those unfortunates feast and the source whence they derive their first knowledge of wrong-doing and crime. One of the greatest evils of the land is light and superficial reading. It not only demoralizes the mind, but it weakens it and unfits it for classical reading and logical conclusion. A picture that you put before the man makes the man or the boy, and if I had the power to be a reformer, I suppose you have reformers in Pennsylvania, and could enforce my decree, I would cut out from the magazines and the newspapers of this day every reference to theft and larceny and crime and wrong doing, and immorality and divorce. I would keep the picture that came before the American people clean and pure. I would have them think of right things and right deeds and good men and good women, rather than mean things and evil deeds and bad men and bad women. I had a protege at one time, and that boy could unlock any lock I ever saw, without knowing the combination He had a criminal instinct, but he always managed to escape the law. He came to see me one time and during the visit he said to me, "Did you see (in one of the greatest New York papers) that account of the way to rob a bank and open a safe? Well" he said. "It was wonderfully correct, but it will do a vast deal of harm, because it will show boys how to do that thing who would not know and would never think of it."

And so, if you keep your ideals high, and if you talk about good things and speak of the good things, you will rear up a race of good boys and girls

I don't know whether you have ever read the legend of "The Great Stone Face," or not. It tells the effect of an ideal upon the life of a boy very marked. As the boy goes out from his cottage home, he sees the carved image that appears to him all that is great and good in human character, and seeing it often he grows to like it, growing to like it, he becomes like it Such is always the influence of comradeship with the great and good.

Lincoln was not one of the advocates of that miserable, hypocritical philosophy which holds that you must know something about evil in order to avoid it. The books he read were moral, instructive and uplifting and upon this as a foundation was laid a character fit for the noblest crown.

It is a little difficult to tell when the American type of man appeared in this country. We are a cosmopolitan people. We consist of all races, Russian, and Polish, Hungarian and Austrian, French, German and Spanish and English and some Americans. Now the signers of the Declaration and the officers who commanded the armies of the Revolution, in their buff and blue and high boots, were for the most part, English gentlemen. Washington was a regular English country squire, and Hamilton was noted for his aristocratic bearing, and your old Benjamin Franklin, of Philadelphia, was an idol of the ladies and graced the Court of France as though he had been born among her nobles. Brave men they were, but don't forget they were men of powdered wigs and silver shoe buckles and knee breeches, and they were of the lordly type. They did not understand democracy as you and I understand it. That type had not then appeared. Events were rapidly culminating to that point about camp fire, day by day, and the principles of American life were coming to the test. The aristocracy was the first point, the right of one man to own the labor of another man was too much to pass the principle of equality as defined in the Declaration

Now this is the way Lincoln put it He said that ever since the dawn of Christianity two principles had been in contest One was the divine right of Kings and the other the right of humanity and it was the same thing no matter what form it assumed. It was the principle which said, "You work and labor and earn in sweat your bread and I will eat it." Society imported a few slaves for the benefit of humanity when the Republic was born, but they left shackles upon the limbs of men. They never intended that slavery should be permanent. Lincoln proves that in his famous union speech in '59. Of the framers of the Constitution, he finds a record of twenty-three and out of twenty-three, twenty-one voted against slavery, and Jefferson said that the Virginians could not invoke the name of God while retaining slaves, and one of the early fathers drew the line where he said the black slave should forever stay. But slavery grew and increased. In his Kansas debates, Lincoln's idea had been altogether American. He said, down in Independence Hall, "I have no sentiment political that doesn't spring from a Declaration which grants, not only to the people of this country, but to the world, liberty for all time to come, and if this country cannot be saved without sacrificing that principle, I would rather be assassinated on the spot than surrender"

In 1858 came the Lincoln-Douglas debates Douglas was one of the leading men in his party and a candidate for his party and the willingness of Abraham Lincoln to cope with this young gentleman of the West marked him as a rising man. Lincoln (always for the Declaration which preached equality) in answering some of Douglas' scornful thrusts, said, "I know of no reason why the black man is not entitled to all the rights of the Declaration, life, liberty and pursuit of happiness. He may never be Judge Douglas' equal in many respects, he may not equal many others in mentality and morals, but in the right to eat the bread which his own hand makes, without asking anyone else's permission, in that he is my equal, Douglas' equal, and the equal of any living man When a man governs himself, that is self-government, but when he dares to govern someone else without that man's consent, that is despotism."

You say this is a trite remark, but it required courage to say it those days. They were the days when Lloyd Garrison was dragged through the streets of cultured Boston with a rope around his neck by an unruly mob, for the utterance of such sentiments and they were the days when Lovejoy was killed while defending his printing press against rioters, because he printed anti-slavery sentiments. And in this atmosphere Lincoln uttered that famous message which brought the Nation face to face with itself. "A house divided against itself cannot stand. I do not believe this Union can endure half slaves and half free. I do not expect to see the house fall. I do not expect to see the Union divide, but I expect to see it cease to remain separate." The battle was given this first Great American, as Lowell characterizes him, and then rose a storm which was to triumph finally at Appomattox. Lincoln's whole heart was upon the preservation of the Union. I think we sometimes forget that. That was the theme of his speeches, the promise of his inauguration, the hope of his administration. With him, it was Union first, and nothing second, and many well meaning anti-slavery advocates bitterly criticized him because he would not make slavery the supreme issue of the war, but Lincoln steadfastly, courageously and, I think, consistently refused to be diverted from his selected course. His attitude on this subject was often misunderstood He hated slavery. He hated it as badly as those who would have had him make that issue the first, and he learned to hate it even more on the occasion when he saw the mulatto girl sold, but he had an oath registered in heaven to defend the Constitution and that Constitution protected slavery and he stood by that oath and that Constitution, sometimes with his hostile army in front and accusing friends in the rear.

Now Lincoln had all kinds of advice. Most public men do It is one of the strange characteristics of the American people that we spend our time and money and frequently our tempers, in electing the only man, who in our judgment is the proper man to fill a certain office, and the moment he is elected we begin to distrust him and tell him how to run the affair.

On one occasion, Lincoln had a delegation visit him from the Evangelical Churches of Chicago who wanted him to issue the Proclamation for the Emancipation of the slaves. The delegation was of such character that Lincoln could not say no and he could not satisfy himself, he knew the time was not ripe for that movement, and his answer shows the marvelous diplomacy of the man. He said, "I am approached with entirely opposite views of religious men who both claim to represent the divine will. One or the other must be mistaken, possibly both. I trust that I am not wrong in saying that if God sees fit to reveal his mind to others, concerning a matter so intimately connected with my duty, it is not impossible that He will reveal it to me. I am giving my particular thought to this subject and whatever appears to me to be God's will, that I will do." And the delegation was silenced

Lincoln said to a friend, "I am here to preserve the Union and not to abolish slavery If I can save the Union by freeing slaves, I will do that; if I can save the Union by retaining slaves, I will do that; if I can save the Union by freeing some slaves and retaining others, I will do that." Lincoln relied upon the inborn love of the Union. He knew that millions had died for the Union; millions had knelt at the altar of slavery, and for the Union he believed that millions would yet kneel, at the altars of …, and so he waited the hour and after trying every expedient, after every compromise was rejected by the slave owners of the South, Lincoln saw that either slavery or the Republic must die and so, upon the 1st of January 1863 he wrote the word 'Liberty' across the banners of his armies, and just as the sign of the cross in the sky gave new hope to the doubting heart of Constantine, so from this day on, Lincoln's soldiers marched with firmer tread and with holier inspiration. In that one step, Lincoln did more for mankind than ever before or since it has been the privilege of mortal man to do. It brought to the North, the friendship of humanity at large. It changed the whole aspect of the war. Though many wished to see the Union divided, they could not consistently stand for slavery. And be it said to the glory of the black man that it made a soldier of him, and 120,000 of them shouldered their muskets and marked to consummate the emancipation for all mankind.

Now Lincoln never lost faith in the people. He believed in the people. He loved the people, trusted them and was trusted by them and had a place in their hearts and homes. He did what many public men fail to do. He answered his critics on every possible occasion. He had none of the cowardice of contemptuous silence but threw the light of his experience upon them, and so the people in turn trusted him as their prophet, and when he called, they came with their all to the altar of sacrifice.

Why history paints no picture like it. Striplings from Colleges, boys from Theological Seminaries, men from the first families in society, and farmers in their homespun, the best and the noblest in the country, all in the one class, and many gave their lives for the cause before the army rested on the field of Appomattox. The first answer of 300,000 to the call for 75,000, the subsequent mustering of an army 1,000,000 strong and the allies of that army truly called grand, mark the superb picture of the times. Just as the Children of Israel gave of their substance towards the building of the Temple at Jerusalem, so these allies, the people, gave three billions of dollars in the way of taxes; they gave fifteen millions in private charities and offered up as a sacrifice to the cause nine out of every twenty able-bodied men. The finest women in the land left their homes of luxury and went down to the front to nurse the wounded. The congregations gave up their pastors until five thousand clergymen marched with the armies to keep unsullied the moral and religious character of the men.

Is it surprising that Lincoln should trust such a people as this, and with his hand in theirs, he should walk calmly through storm cloud and gloom until the sunlight broke again upon the most magnificent exhibition of Christian Democracy this world has ever seen? Why, his life is an example for us, never equalled since anywhere in America.

I see him in 1831. He is leaving Illinois, coming down the Mississippi on a flat boat, fearless and homeless, wanting even the necessaries of life. I see him again thirty years later in the State of Illinois, the God acclaimed of his fellow citizens. The Post Master of New Salem with its fifteen thousand inhabitants has become the President of the United States; the urchin of the Kentucky backwoods has become the chief of the army and the navy of this Country. Why the change from the … life of Abraham Lincoln to … in this great land is ma… When Lincoln became Pres… States

LETTER FROM DOYLESTOWN

Gazette Correspondent Reviews the News Field at the County Seat.

ANNEXATION TALK

Capt. McReynolds, of Company G Selected to Go to Texas to Observe Military Conditions---Review of News Field.

Doylestown, March 22.

Annexation is still the ruling topic of conversation and even acrid discussion, at the county seat. In an attempt to please everybody borough council formulated a plan that pleases nobody. Pieces of land are carved out, by this plan, at irregular intervals and annexed to the borough. In one case a man owns a number of houses on land adjoining the borough that were built with the expectancy of obtaining borough advantages, which were refused them. These houses are to be taken in but the remaining building lots, on which he promised to build, if they were taken into the borough were carefully excluded. At another point a long, narrow strip is run out into the township so that one man may be able to get borough water. Popular opinion demands a revision of these crooked lines and the taking in of more available building sites but a certain few seem to have a sufficiently strong pull to keep certain tracts on the outside just as they have in the past.

The county seat has, perhaps, more ownerless canines than any other place in the State, that is no one owns them when the assessor makes his round, and perhaps fewer that pay tax. Last year but twenty-two wore the proper tag so borough council on Monday night, in consequence of numerous complaints of dogs attacking horses, went through their annual farce of ordering that a dog catcher be employed and unless more horses are bitten this will end it for another year and the assessors will find fewer dogs than they found last year. Another important matter before council was the removal of the Armstrong Building, at Shewell avenue, right in the centre of the town, for which the County Commissioners are to pay when they get the money and there are no more bridges to build, which will probably be when this year's taxes come in.

Water metres, which have taken up a good deal of councils time, are now to be installed but only at such places where there is reason to believe that the consumers are paying for a much smaller quantity than they use or where the con… is thought to be wasting water. … council had a very importa… not a harmonious, meeting and … actually accomplished something.

The political situation remains unchanged, discussions are few and far between, and no new candidates have announced themselves. The shrievalty still hangs on the tree awaiting a shake by the right man and although it is said that there are a number of candidates, no one is willing to name any one. That Grundy will select a man on the west side of the county seems to be universally conceded, but so far, the men selected have not responded to the call and the nomination still goes a begging. It is rumored that a County Treasurer has been decided upon, but that it is not deemed advisable to make it public at this time, just what the reason for this is, is not known at the county seat, but is in Bristol.

When words fail to express their feelings on annexation, or the argument becomes too heated, the average citizen turns to base ball. Manager Kelly has been quietly at work and strengthened up all the weak spots in last year's team and is practically sure of the pennant in the North Penn League this year. Joe Eldridge, who pitched Perkasie to victory last year, will be seen with a county seat uniform on this year and will play a better game than he did last year. Kelly always has a surprise or two up his sleeve and when he lets them loose the fans go wild with enthusiasm. The county seat wins this year. Practice will start about the middle of next month and then base ball will be the only topic. We sure have a team of winners this year, and only bad luck can defeat us.

School Director Robert S. Garner, of Doylestown, was stricken by a stroke of apoplexy, Sunday morning and died instantaneously at the home of his son-in-law, J. Freeman Hendricks, on West Court street, about 9 o'clock. Some weeks ago he suffered the first serious illness of his unusually active life, but recently appeared to be recovering his health and strength. His death was not wholly a surprise to his immediate family as they had been informed by his physician that he would very likely pass away in such a sudden manner, but it was a distinct shock to his many friends.

He was seen by his grandson about 6 o'clock and appeared to be as well as usual. Later he came down stairs before the other members of the household and, as there was a morning paper on the kitchen table and other things had been done there, it is supposed he was going about as usual when he went to lie down on the lounge in the dining room. About 9 o'clock his grandson went into the room and found him lying on the floor beside the lounge dead.

Mr. Garner was one of the best known men in the county seat and was well known over the county. He was a man of more than average ability and, besides being a member of the school board, was active in politics for many years and very prominent in Odd Fellowship.

At one time or another he held a deputyship in nearly every office in the Row and in emergencies was called on to help nearly every officer, regardless of politics. For many years past he has been one of the two men to compute the vote after each election and was very remarkable for his accuracy. The funeral, held on Wednesday, was a very large one and was in charge of Aquetong Lodge, No. 193, I. O. O. F., of which he was secretary for many years and for which he worked in and out of season. He will be very much missed at the county seat.

The county seat will be ably represented at the scene of the present unpleasantness between our neighbors in Mexico. Captain Abel MacReynolds, of G Company, National Guards, is one of the militia officers selected from this State to go to Texas and observe the conditions there as well as the proper way to handle a large army in detail. The Captain is one of the best officers in the Guard and no better selection could have been made by those in authority.

The promoters of a hospital for the county seat are not making much … at the present time over their pl…, but are devoting their time and energy to working up a good and healthy public sentiment in its favor. … they start out to raise money for this purpose they will be … at the small amount of … they will have to use and … amount of money they will … collect. The time has … a hospital at the county … an absolute necessity not so … for the accommodation of … own as for the surrounding … As at present planned the … will not be in Doylestown but near it and easily accessible both by train and trolley.

No serious efforts have been made to ascertain the cause of the fire in the Court House steeple some two weeks ago. Had it broken out at night there might have been a story of burned records to tell that would have caused consternation among the people of the whole county. It may have been, probably was, an accident, but even at that precautions should be taken to guard against similar accidents. On the floor below, guarded by two very dry, inflammable wooden doors, is the opening to the loft over the public offices and that the fire would surely have crept in there is beyond doubt. This week the damage is being repaired by new wood work where there should be iron.

A quieter month than this one has not been known at the county seat for many years. The spring business is coming on slowly and if it was not for the fact that at the beginning of the week advantage was taken of the fine weather and several families moved from one home to another, we would not have known that Spring was really here. So far there has been nothing in the weather conditions to justify the belief and even that exceedingly busy place, in the spring, the Recorder's office, is not overburdened with work.

Officer A. R. Atkinson, of Doylestown, arrived at the Bucks county jail Friday morning, with Jonas Gares, an inmate of the Soldiers' Home at Erie, who is charged with having set fire to the home of his wife and children at Carversville on the night of February 17th. It is believed to be one of the most important arrests of recent years and was brought about through the clever detective work of Officer Atkinson with the assistance of District Attorney William C. Ryan.

On the night of February 17th Mrs. Gares, whose husband had deserted her and her children two years before, was aroused by a choking sensation and found the house full of smoke. With her 20-years-old son and 15-years-old daughter she went down stairs and found the door and side of the house afire.

Buckets of water extinguished the blaze and then it was found that a deliberate attempt had been made to burn the property.

Outside in a corner formed by the door, the step and the frame, was found an oil-saturated piece of carpet and bundle of paper with a glass insulator holding it. Nearby was found an oil can.

Starting with information that Gares had told a neighbor on one occasion that he would like to burn up the house and wife, District Attorney Ryan was sure of the guilt of the erring husband. After Gares had left two years before Mrs. Gares applied for half of his pension money and was granted it. Gares later came back and wanted to live there again, but his wife knew of his bad reputation, his laziness and his drunken habits and refused to have him. Besides had she lived with him again the half pension would have been stopped and could never have been gotten again if he had deserted her.

The loss of half of the pension and his evident dislike of his wife is believed to have been the man's motive.

Officer Atkinson then took up the trail and with the aid of the oil can got evidence which traced Gares to the old home on the night of the fire. It was at first thought Gares might have come down from Nazareth where he had been, on the trolley, but this and other conjectures proved to be wrong. It was learned in Doylestown that he was here on the night of the fire, hired a team from a livery and returned it later that night. Further inquiry showed that after getting off the train here he went to Barrett's hardware store, bought the oil can and had it filled with oil.

A telegram to the Soldiers' Home showed that Gares had been away on a furlough and as soon as he returned this week District Attorney Ryan was notified. Officer Atkinson went there and arrested him.

A reception was given Rev. and Mrs William Sweet on Wednesday evening in the church parlor, they having returned from the conference and commencing the fourth year of the pastorate, which has been most pleasant and profitable—the spirit of good fellowship which has prevaded and the steady growth of the church attesting to their popularity. Many outside the congregation extended to them also a hearty welcome. The reception followed the regular prayer service. After a social hour refreshments of ice cream and cake were served.

The choir of Welsh singers which the public was privileged to enjoy at the Foulke & Long Institute on Thursday, sang most acceptably and were an honor to their native heath, the home of song and poetry. The chorus and songs were received most enthusiastically and though the choir was composed of Welsh miners, without special training beyond the chorus work, the result was most pleasing even to the most critical music lover. They were entertained by Miss Helen V. Randall at a supper, the decorations being red white and green, the Welsh colors, and the place cards bearing the picture of the Foulke & Long, the Welsh motto and the Red Lion. As is their custom they sang the blessing, which no doubt was most devout in lieu of the courtesy.

Through the courtesy of Mrs. Warren Tryon and Miss Helen V. Randall the public will be given a treat by hearing Miss Meta Jones, of Philadelphia, speak on the interesting topic of "Wanderlust in Literature Through Stories," on Saturday evening, April 15, at the Foulke & Long Institute. Crowds See "Madame Sherry."

Philadelphia waited a long while to see "Madame Sherry," the sensational musical comedy success which ran for over eight months at the New Amsterdam Theatre in New York, but theatre goers, now it has arrived at the Forrest Theatre, are making up for lost time by crowding the big and beautiful playhouse to its utmost capacity at every performance. "Madame Sherry" has fully lived up to the enthusiastically heralded reports of its intrinsic delights in music of the most captivating quality and rare humor in its story and its reception Philadelphia has so far been a round of ovations. The engagement at the Forrest is limited and therefore attention is especially called to the fact that the brief season there will be the only performance of "Madame Sherry" to be given the State of Pennsylvania; as immediately after the close of this engagement Woods, Frazee and Lederer's big company and splendid production of "Madame Sherry" will be taken on a two year's world's tour, embracing Dublin, Glasgow, London, Berlin, Paris, Vienna, and the principal cities of Australia and India. The music, by Karl Hoschna, is in that famous composer's most melodic vein, and the chief theme number, "Ev'ry Little Movement Has a Meaning All Its Own" has attained popularity all the world over. There are many other gems of melody also that will set everybody whistling or humming the song hits of "Madame Sherry." The story in the capital book by Otto Hauerbach taken from a French source, briefly relates the misadventures of a gay young bachelor in his attempt to obtain money from a rich old uncle. The young spendthrift hits upon the idea of claiming that he needs money to support a wife and two children. The uncle doesn't send the money asked for but unexpectedly visits his nephew instead to see for himself his nephew's family. Facing exposure, the young man rises to the occasion by promptly lugging in his cook and presenting her as his spouse, and hunting up two young acquaintances and passing them off as his children. The fun starts with this device. The love sentiment of the piece comes from Yvonne Sherry, a young ward of the rich old uncle, who fresh from a convent, on her first visit to the gay outside world, falls desperately in love. Lina Abarbanell, dainty, rich-voiced and vivacious, scores quite a triumph as the little convent maid. Miss Abarbanell is well remembered for her former successes as the best of "Merry Widows," and in Henry W. Savage's production of "The Love Cure." That well known comedian Edwin Stevens, has a strong character part in the role of Theophilus Sherry, the uncle, and one of the most popular successes of the piece is made by Elizabeth Murray, whose exuberant humor and aptitude in joining comedy and song are shown in some new coon songs and "The Dublin Rag." Other well known favorites who have brilliant successes are Jack Gardner, Frances Demarest, Violet Dale, Sherman Wade, John Reinhard and Joseph C Smith; the chorus is one of distinctive beauty in its feminine ranks and of exceptional talent, and it is worthy of note that the entire company is the exact organization that came intact from its many months of triumph at the New York New Amsterdam Theatre. Scenically and in its costumes and effects, the production is one of rare beauty and artistic taste. Two matinees are given weekly, namely on Wednesday and Saturday, the Wednesday matinees being at special popular prices, with no seat over one dollar. The Forrest Theatre during this engagement has a large influx of out of town patrons and it seems as if the whole country from every available point was going to Philadelphia to see "Madame Sherry." Certainly no one should miss the limited opportunities for witnessing this merry … ling and beautiful of musical productions. …

Gentle, effloresent spring came tripping into Perkasie Tuesday afternoon, and close on her heels will come the birds, the flowers and the sentimental effusions of the poets. One o'clock was the time set for her appearance, when Old Winter, already shorn of much of his disagreeable powers, became a memory.

The action of Judge Porter, of Lawrence county, in refusing all of the 108 liquor license applications, demonstrates that under certain conditions the Brooks high license law can be made an effective prohibition measure. There are no liquor licenses issued in Greer county, nor in Mifflin, and Bedford county has but one licensed place, the Bedford Springs Hotel. In Bucks county there are 186 licensed establishments, while in Schuylkill county there are over three thousand. The Brooks law is at once an ordinance of virtue or unworthiness, according to its administration and the sentiment behind it.

LOCAL COUNTY NEWS.

Inventories of personal property have been filed in the following estates: Lewis Hartless, late of Bensalem township, $325.39; Daniel G. George late of Milford township, $3413.

A man from the upper end of the county while in Doylestown, Monday, created some excitement in the neighborhood of Lower Finfeum burying ground on account of a new grave which seems to have been made there mysteriously last week.

Fifty business and professional men of Sellersville, members of the Board of Trade, have outlined a comprehensive plan for a "boom" year at that place, for the improvement of several principal highways, oiling of highways, several notable building propositions and the possible procurement of a modern sewage system.

Re-organization of the Newtown Cold Storage Company was effected Saturday, but three of the old stockholders remaining. George C. Worstall president; John Blackfan, secretary and treasurer and William W. Dolan. The by-laws were amended, reducing the number of officers from seven to five. C. K. Williams, of Easton and George B. Brown, of Pineville, were the new members elected. The former was elected vice president. A resolution was passed and application made for an increase of the capital stock from $20,000 to $25,000 and for the change of name from the Newtown Ice and Storage Company to the Eastburn Place Guernsey Dairy and Ice Company.

All the Sunday schools in Trenton will be invited to hold their annual outings in future at the old Morrisville baseball grounds instead of Cadwallader Park and other pleasure resorts. The grounds are owned by the Methodist Sunday schools of Trenton, but are leased to the Morrisville Baseball Club. At a meeting at Central M. E. Church it was decided to formulate a plan to raise enough money to put the grounds into condition for the coming season. It was also decided to set apart one Sunday for collections which will go towards the expenses of maintaining the premises.

Six head of cattle owned by J. William Frankenfield, of near Springfield Church, were condemned by Inspector Dr. D. S. Hickman, of Philadelphia, who found them effected with tuberculosis. They were ordered to be killed and Gottlieb Buebener, of South Bethlehem, with an assistant, disposed of the cattle on Friday.

Mrs. Charles Jones, of Yardley, made an unsuccessful attempt to commit suicide on Friday by drowning in the Delaware river. Mrs. Jones waded out into the water to a depth above her waist and threw herself backward. Two junk dealers, who were passing by in a wagon, plunged into the water and rescued the woman. Assistance was summoned and a physician called. Mrs. Jones was removed to her home, where, late Friday night, it was said that she would recover, although suffering from shock.

Judge: "Edith is surely not going to marry that living skeleton of a man. He's nothing but skin and bones." Tess: "Why not; He'll make her a rattling husband."

had seceded and four more followed. The army was discouraged and its officers resigning and joining the Confederate ranks. The Navy was scattered to the ends of the earth, and the treasury bankrupt. A tremendous problem this for one man and yet he faced it as gladly as he faced the hardships of his boyhood, and in the midst of the storm, I see him smile and I hear him say, "Let us believe that behind the clouds the sun still shines." I see him as a man of war. He gets two millions of men. He gathers half a million horses; he drives his artillery twelve hundred miles in a single week, he feeds and arms his men; he suspends the habeas corpus. A word from this man and a million eager men spring to their guns, no order, and regiment on regiment grows before your eyes, a word more and they march over field, through forests, across streams, hunger may weaken them, half their number may fall, and at another word from this man half a million more spring up to take their places in the turmoil of death. Power on one side, deficulty upon the other, harrassed by hardship and by foe and attacked by friend. A weaker man would have seen the opportunity for a despot and seized the leaders of the Republic and set himself upon the throne, but this man never falters and in all the grandeur of the power he wielded, he remains the simplest, kindest, gentlest of men, crying with the fatherless and shedding his tears upon the soldiers' graves.

But no man can understand the character of Lincoln without some knowledge of his faith in God. He said to his neighbor at Springfield, "I go to assume a responsibility greater than that assumed by any president since the days of Washington. I cannot succeed without the help of divine Providence. Pray for me that I may have divine guidance without which I cannot succeed, but with which I cannot fail." In 1864 the Methodist Conference met in Chicago and they sent a delegation to Washington to visit the President and promise him their support. After he had been addressed by the spokesman, Lincoln said, "God bless the Methodist Episcopal Church and God bless all the churches and blessed be God who has given us the churches in this hour of trial." The Bishops on his own personal friends never went to Washington without calling on the President and they never were allowed to leave the White House without being taken into a room set aside for that purpose for a word of prayer.

In proclaiming the Emancipation of the slaves he reviewed the progress of the Union army and then said, "I have not said much about this question of slavery, but I think the time has come for action. I promised my Maker and myself that if the Confederate Army was driven out of Missouri I would issue the Proclamation." Lincoln threw his Proclamation after Lee and kept his promise to himself and God. Gen. Sickles was taken to Washington to the hospital there for treatment. Lincoln called to see him and they talked about the situation. Sickles said, "Mr. President, were you not anxious about Gettysburg?" Lincoln said "No. Seward was anxious and Stanton was too, but I felt no concern about Gettysburg." "How was that?" And Lincoln said, "The night before I went into my room and I got down on my knees and took the matter up with the Lord. This was His cause and His fight and if we lost Gettysburg the Union would be turned; but if He would stand by us, we would stand by him. And somehow, a great peace came over my heart and I felt that Gettysburg would be all right," and then they came to talk about Vicksburg and Lincoln said, "Vicksburg will be all right too. I have prayed over that." Now that conversation occurred upon the 5th day of July and you will remember that Vicksburg fell upon the 4th and while that conversation was in progress the dispatch was on the way from Vicksburg up the Mississippi to sing the glory of the victory to Washington, and Lincoln had the answer to his prayer, and he trusted implicitly the God who watches our footsteps and counts the hairs of our head.

Great man as Lincoln was, my friends, don't forget he was a human man and he was so great that he was simple and easy of approach. Only weak men find it necessary to surround themselves with obstacles. Lincoln treated the kneeling mother just the same as he did the financial king and he treated the private soldier the same as the commanding general. He did not patronize the one nor bend to the other. He was a great, good man and he did what so many men fail to do. He combined goodness and greatness and he had the heart as well as the faults of humanity. We thought of him as a human being. The greatest part of his humanity was his heart. He loved his fellow men. If he heard the sorrow stricken parent pleading for the life of a son, he could not turn away and he stepped over the margin oftener than necessary, some people thought necessary. Lincoln, in the great sympathy of his heart pardoned soldier after soldier, at the request of pleading father or mother or son or brother or sister, and when he issued the pardon, he could not rest until the papers were ready to place his name on them. On one occasion the wife of one man who had been found within our lines and sentenced, came to Lincoln to plead for her husband. After listening to her Lincoln said, "Is your husband a good man? Is he good to you and your children or does he beat them and treat you badly?" She said, "Oh, no, he is a good husband and a good father and he loves me and the children and we cannot do without him. The only trouble with him is he is a fool about politics. He was born in the South. If you will pardon him and turn him over to me, I will see that he never fights for the South again." Then said Lincoln, "I will pardon him and I will turn him over to you for safe keeping," and the woman overcome with joy broke down in convulsive sobbing. And then the great President looked down on her and said, "If I had know this would have given you so much trouble, I would not have pardoned him." At another time a father was pleading for his son who was sentenced to be shot, and after hearing him Lincoln sent for his aide and said, "Telegraph General Hatter to suspend action in this case until further orders from me." The father looked at the President and said, "I can't take that message to that boy's mother. She is almost broken hearted now and she will feel lost lest you change your mind." Lincoln said, "I will have to do the best I can in this administration. My Generals tell me how that I have overstepped the bounds, but you go home and tell that boy's mother that if he lives until they get further orders from me, people will say when they hear of his death, that Methuselah was a babe compared to him."

Lincoln said, "I want it said of me that I plucked a thistle and I planted a flower for the glory of God."

Lincoln's addresses always illustrated the point. He had learned that in talking at the corner groceries, and just as St. Paul could preach the Gospel so that it was understood by Jew and Gentile, so Lincoln could talk so that all men could understand him. And that characteristic in Lincoln was a powerful one. On one occasion some of my friends in the clergy came down to complain to the President of General Grant, the only General he had who was doing anything, because he was drinking, and Lincoln replied to them, that if they knew where he could get the same brand of liquor that Grant drank he would buy that liquor for some of the other Generals. At one time it was said that Lincoln was not meeting the Christians of the South in the proper spirit and according to Mr. Greeley he ought to send a commissioner to meet their commissioners (that was before we had reciprocity). Lincoln saw the humor of the situation, and he immediately appointed Greeley on that commission. Of course, Greeley failed in his commission. Lincoln's magnificent humor first exposed the habits of the people, and yet no words of ridicule, no licentious cartoons, nor the severest criticisms were too hard to be used against this kindest, this gentlest of men. One of the strange characteristics of us people who think we love fair play, is that we take politicians as a whole and have a bad impression of them and do not give them fair judgment. "Judge not that ye be not judged" is too little practised in this land of ours. Reference to this injustice which at times almost broke Lincoln's heart is made strong as a moral for observation.—Kind treatment for our public men. There was nothing to our his character and his enemies wept chastened tears of sorrow and sympathy at his death. The London Punch, one of the bitterest foes Lincoln had, wrote at the time of his death.

Besides this corpse that bears for winding sheet
The stars and stripes he lived to rear anew,
Between the mourners at his head and feet,
Say, scurril—jester, is there room for you?

Yes, he had lived to shame me from my sneer,
To lame my pencil, and confute my pen—
To make me own this kind of princes peer,
This rail splitter, a true-born king of men.

Ah, yes, Lincoln' charity as a master barred nothing and his fame will grow greater and greater as the years roll on. Just as Shakespeare's does in literature and Moses' in Israel, because he was a great, good man. When the curtain fell upon the last scene at Appomattox and the war was ended and Lincoln had triumphed over all forms of opposition, it fired the country, saved the Union, gave emancipation to the slaves and when his judgment and achievements had been paraded before the world, he was the supreme hero of the hour. In that moment of triumph he went down to Richmond and walking up from the station to the Capitol Square almost unattended some one took his arm and said, "Look Mr. Lincoln, there is your flag waving over their Capitol," and Lincoln looked up and he saw the stars and stripes waving over the building from which Jefferson Davis had just fled and a light of almost ineffable glory lit up his countenance as he realized that the maximum of his life had come, that this glorious banner waving over the dome of the Confederacy told the triumph of the Union.

The story of his death amid the general rejoicings of the Nation you all know. April 14th, 1865, his eyelids closed and his head fell upon his breast in peace. The age of machines, we are pleased to say, is gone, but the age of an ever-living, personal God, who sacrifices our footsteps as He watches the fall of the sparrow is still with us. Lincoln's fame and crown of greatness cannot be measured by human standards. He came and went as a messenger and shall we not say that the lowly boy born in the Kentucky woods was sent to save the Union and to free the slaves and that when his work was done, God called him back to his home in the skies?

All about us are the things he left. There is the black man and his freedom; there is the school boy and his declamation; there is the hope of the lowy and opportunities he may possess, the inspiration of his example; there is the justice of American Institutions which he originated and the call of privilege and opportunity he bequeathed. There is glory shining in the unsullied honor that carried liberty to Cuba and a new hope to the burned-skinned race at Manilla, and there above the misery of battles and despotism of death is heard the sweet obligato of his "malice toward none and charity for all." The master spirit of the Republic, he touches the chords of memory and wakes the better thoughts; he is the Nation's offering, his birth a sacrament, his life a prayer, his death a benediction.

Radiation of the Sun.

As a result of the action of Congress at the last session in making a special appropriation of $5,000 for the purpose, Dr. C. G. Abbot, director of the Smithsonian Institute, will be able to complete within the next year an investigation which was begun in 1905 and which, if it arrives at the expected conclusion, will result in a discovery of the first rank, such as is not often made in astronomical work.

This investigation is expected to prove that the radiation of the sun varies and that this variation produces a corresponding variation in the temperture of the earth. While his discovery, if made, will have its highest value for pure science, it will also be of great benefit in its application to agriculture, to long distance weather forecasts and other practical purposes.

In speaking of the work, Dr. Abbot says, "When we began to make these measurements there was nowhere in the world any exact scale of measurement of radiation, although physicians had been working in devising instruments for that purpose for about sixty years. Still there remained an uncertainty of 5 to 10 per cent. In the scale of pyrheliometry, as it is called. We have devised several instruments to be used as standards for that purpose, and in this past year we have made a careful comparison of two of our instruments of our most improved type, and these agree perfectly in fixing the scale of measurements. This apparatus is used now as a standard by which to standardize other apparatus which has been sent around the world. We have sent instruments to France and Italy and have requests for them from Argentina, Peru and other countries."

Peppered Ice Cream.

"There's pepper in that," said a restaurant waiter, pointing to a small silver shaker he had placed beside a heaping dish of ice cream he was carrying to a guest. "Sure, it's to put on the ice cream, too," he replied when an inquirer failed to see the connection between the two.

"Lots of folks want to put pepper on their ices. You see, if a man's stomach is sensitive the cold cream hurts him, but pepper is stimulating enough to overcome the effects of the cold. And the funny thing is that you don't taste the pepper at all. The ice cream is so cold that it kills the other. If you don't believe it I'll give you some with pepper, and you'll find that there's no taste of pepper there at all."

Miles' Grave.

"Which is the deepest, the longest, the broadest and the smallest grave in the churchyard?" said a pedestrian to his companion while meditating among the tombs in the burying ground at Esher.

"Why," replied his companion, "it is that in which poor Miles Button lies buried, for it contains Miles below the sod, Miles in length and Miles in breadth, and yet, after all, it is but a Button-hole."—Pearson's Weekly.

Effect of Tight Lacing.

"Is tight lacing unwise?" a teacher asked a young lady in a physiology lesson.

"Yes, it is very unwise," was the reply.

"Why is it unwise?" the teacher pursued.

"Because it busts the corset," said the young lady.—[illegible]

Last week a bill as introduced in the Texas Legislature by prohibiting the use, sale or manufacture in that state of false teeth, false hair, wooden legs and bobbin skirts. Why not include false pretense in the matter of Texas Senators who re ign their positions one day and withdraw it the next?

Richard Achilles Ballinger, who is probably one of the most unpopular men in the United States, since his retirement from President Taft's cabinet arbitrarily does not propose to retire inside the grandeur of the Puget Sound country and there lead a life of tranquility. When Richard is himself again he announces that he is going to fight the "arch-conspirators who have been following him with an assassin's knife."

Seattle has elected a reform council to uphold the reform mayor recently chosen at the recall election. The dispatch says that "women voters took an active interest in the election." Every time that women take an active interest in an election they help the cause of progress—and make converts for suffrage among men whose chief fear of the change arises from the apprehension that only a few women will avail themselves of the voting privilege.

There are events occurring in every community which, if reported in a local paper, would create a commotion little dreamed of. What to report and what not to report and often perplexes the editor. He is often unjustly accused of cowardice and favoritism, when all the time he is looking toward the good reputation of the town where his lot is cast. The local editor finds himself between two fires, and whichever way he turns he is sure to be unjustly treated. This is one of the pleasures of the newspaper business.

The man who deserts his wife and family when he thinks the burden too strenuous to bear or the woman who deserts her children to "go with a handsomer man," will have a whole lot harder sledding if they are caught than heretofore, if the bill introduced in the Legislature by Representative Conners of Allegheny, becomes a law. This bill makes wife and family desertion a felony instead of misdemeanor. This puts the offender in a criminal class and he or she then ranks in the eyes of the law the same as a burglar or a thief, subject to imprisonment in the penitentiary as well as a fine and political disfranchisement. This bill was introduced at the instance of the Associated Charities of Pittsburg.

The legislature of New Hampshire has declared in favor of the electing of United States Senators by direct vote. New Hampshire is the thirty-fourth state to declare for this reform. It is also the first New England state to take this step. A direct vote resolution is pending in the Connecticut legislature, and is expected to go through. If it does, then only eleven states will be left out of the list on record for the right way to elect Senators. They are Maine, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, New York, West Virginia, Kentucky, Maryland, Florida, North Dakota and Washington. The gratifying reflection is that the states do not need to wait on the will of the United States Senate to accomplish the direct election of the members of that body. And they do not disposed to wait.

The agitating world awaits a treatise on the psychology of love letters. Documents of extraordinary interest at the time of writing, why does their flavor so soon depart? Published in a court proceeding, everybody seizes them with avidity—the more intense, perhaps, because of an uneasy feeling that one's own letters of years ago would seem even more foolish. The change in the love letter isn't necessarily due in the slightest measure to a fading of affection. The most devoted husband wouldn't care to look over the letters of his courtship days. There is nothing about them really to be ashamed of. His love hasn't abated. They seemed the most natural expressions in the world when they were written. But now they are mushy. There is no getting away from it, mushy is the word. And his wife feels the same way about her replies Curious, the changes that a few years bring to forms of government, style in clothes and love letters. Curious, but inevitable. Robert and Elizabeth Browning probably were the only persons in the world who ever escaped them says the Kansas City Times.

The tentative plans of the progressive Republicans for the extra session of Congress, as outlined by Senator Clapp, denote that there will be no cessation in the activity of these people's representatives in the new Congress. The progressive Republicans in the Senate are in a peculiarly advantageous position. They hold the balance of power. The Democrats, even if united, will need these Republicans to put through such good measure as they may father. And there should not be any irreconcilable differences between the programs of the progressive Democrats and the progressive Republicans in either House. Even on the tariff they are closer together, so far as immediate changes are expedient, than are the two wings of the Republican party. This great fact of a new, non-partisan division is going to be made more and more apparent in the new Congress, for there are already signs that the reactionary Democrats are going to align themselves on some important measures with the reactionary Republicans. If the results of the extra session are what they should be, no party will have exclusive credit. The honors will go to the progressives, regardless of party.

Re-submission to the people of Maine of the question of the state constitution prohibiting manufacture and sale of ... liquors lacks only the signature of Governor Frederick W. Plaisted before being put into effect. The submission resolution passed both the house and senate by a vote sufficient to ... enactment. Plaisted, last spring came triumphantly to ... Tuesday afternoon, declared ... her heels will come the ... ates. Flowers and the sentimental cordins of the poets. One o'clock is the time set for her appearance, when Old Winter, already shorn of much of his disagreeable powers, became a memory.

The action of Judge Porter, of Lawrence county, in refusing all of the 108 liquor license applications, demonstrates that under certain conditions the Brooks high license law can be made an effective prohibition measure. There are no liquor licenses issued in Green county, nor in Mifflin, and Bedford county has but one license d place, the Bedford Springs Hotel. In Bucks county there are 136 licensed establishments, while in Schuylkill county there are over three thousand. The Brooks law is at once an ordinance of virtue or unworthiness, according to its administration and the sentiment behind it.

LOCAL COUNTY NEWS.

Inventories of personal property have been filed in the following estates: Lewis Matthews late of Bensalem township, $42[illegible]; Daniel G. George late of Milford township, $3413.

A man from the upper end of the county while in Doylestown Monday, reported some excitement in the neighborhood of Lower Hilltown carrying ground on account of a new grave which seems to have been made there mysteriously last week.

Fifty business and professional men of Sellersville, members of the Board of Trade, have outlined a comprehensive plan for a "boom" year at that place, for the improvement of several principal highways, curing of highways, several mobile building propositions and the possible procurement of a modern sewage system.

The reorganization of the New town Ice and Storage Company was effected on Saturday, but little of the old stockholders remaining. George G. Worstall, president, John Blackfan, secretary and treasurer and William W. Fabian. The by laws were amended, reducing the number of offices from ten to five. C. K. Williams, of Easton and George B. Brown of Pineville, were the new members elected. The former was elected vice president. A resolution was passed and application made for an increase of the capital stock from $20,000 to $30,000 and for the change of name from the New-town Ice and Storage Company to the Eastburn Place Guernsey Dairy and Ice Company.

All the Sunday schools in Trenton will be invited to hold their annual outings in future at the old Morrisville baseball grounds instead of Cadwallader Park and other pleasure resorts. The grounds are owned by the Methodist Sunday schools of Trenton but are leased to the Morrisville Baseball Club. At a meeting of Central M. E. Church it was decided to formulate a plan to raise enough money to put the grounds into condition for the coming season. It was also decided to set apart one Sunday for collections which will go towards the expenses of maintaining the premises.

Six head of cattle owned by J. William Frankenfield of near Springfield Church were condemned by inspector Dr D. S. Hockman, of Philadelphia, who found them effected with tuberculosis. They were ordered to be killed and Gottlieb Huebener, of South Bethlehem with an assistant, disposed of the cattle on Friday.

Mrs Charles Jones, of Yardley, made an unsuccessful attempt to commit suicide on Friday by drowning in the Delaware river. Mrs. Jones waded out into the water to a depth above her waist and threw herself backward. Two junk dealers, who were passing in a wagon, plunged into the water and rescued the woman. Assistance was summoned and a physician called. Mrs. Jones was removed to her home, where, late on Friday night it was said that she would recover, although suffering from shock.

Madge Lillian is surely not going to marry that living skeleton of a man. Has nothing but skin and bones. Yes. Will not; He'll make her a rattling husband.

had acceded and four more followed. The army was discouraged and its officers resigning and joining the Confederate ranks. The Navy was scattered to the ends of the earth, and the treasury bankrupt. A tremendous problem this for our man and yet he faced it as gladly as he faced the hardships of his boyhood, and in the midst of the storm, I see him smile and I hear him say, "Let us believe that behind the clouds the sun still shines." I see him as a man of war. He gets two millions of men. He gathers half a million horses; he drives his artillery twelve hundred miles in a single week, he feeds and arms his men; he suspends the habeas corpus. A word from this man and a million eager men spring to their guns, an order, and regiment on regiment grows before your eyes, a word more and they march over field, through forests, across streams, hunger may weaken them, half their number may fall, and at another word from this man half a million more spring up to take their places in the carnival of death. Power on one side, difficulty upon the other, harassed by hardship and by foe and attacked by friend. A weaker man would have seen the opportunity for a despot and seized the leaders of the Republic and sat himself upon the throne, but this man never falters and in all the grandeur of the power he wielded, he remains the simplest, kindest, gentlest of men, crying with the fatherless and shedding his tears upon the soldiers' graves.

But no man can understand the character of Lincoln without some knowledge of his faith in God. He said to his neighbor at Springfield, "I go to assume a responsibility greater than that assumed by any president since the days of Washington. I cannot succeed without the help of divine Providence, and rely on me that I may have divine guidance without which I cannot succeed, but with which I cannot fail." In 1864 the Methodist Conference met in Chicago, and they sent a delegation to Washington to visit the President and promise him their support. After he had been addressed by the spokesman, Lincoln said, "I am of the Methodist Episcopal Church and God bless all the churches and blessed be God who has given us the churches in this hour of trial." The Bishops who were his personal friends never went to Washington without calling on the President and they never were allowed to leave the White House without being taken into a room set aside for that purpose for a word of prayer.

In proclaiming the Emancipation of the slaves he reviewed the progress of the Union army and then said, "I have not said much about this question of slavery, but I think the time has come for action. I promised my Master and myself that if the Confederate Army was driven out of Missouri I would issue the Proclamation." Lincoln threw his Proclamation after Lee and kept his promise to himself and God. Gen Sickles was taken to Washington to the hospital there for treatment. Lincoln called to see him and they talked about the situation Sickles said, "Mr. President, were you not anxious about Gettysburg?" Lincoln said "No, Seward was anxious and Stanton was too, but I felt no concern about Gettysburg." "How was that?" And Lincoln said, "The night before, I went into my room and I got down on my knees and took the matter up with the Lord. This was His cause and His fight and if we lost Gettysburg the Union would be ruined; but if He would stand by us, we would stand by him. And somehow, a great peace came over my heart and I felt that Gettysburg would be all right" and then they came to talk about Vicksburg and Lincoln said, "Vicksburg will be all right too. I have prayed over that." Now that conversation occurred upon the 5th day of July, and you will remember that Vicksburg fell upon the 4th and while that conversation was in progress the dispatch was on the way from Vicksburg up the Mississippi to sing the glory of the victory to Washington, and Lincoln had the answer to his prayer, and he trusted implicitly the God who watches our footsteps and counts the hairs of our head.

Great man as Lincoln was, my friends, don't forget he was a human man and he was so great that he was simple and easy of approach. Only weak men find it necessary to surround themselves with obstacles. Lincoln treated the kneeling mother just the same as he did the financial king and he treated the private soldier the same as the commanding general. He did not patronize the poor but he bent to the level of a great, good man and he did what so many men fail to do. He combined goodness and greatness and he had the heart as well as the faults of humanity. We thought of him as a human being. The greatest part of his humanity was his heart. He loved his fellow men. If he heard the sorrow stricken parent pleading for the life of a son, he could not turn away and he stepped over the margin oftener than necessary, some people thought necessary. Lincoln, in the great sympathy of his heart pardoned soldier after soldier, at the request of a pleading father or mother or son or brother or sister, and when he issued the pardon, he could not rest until the papers were sent to a place his name on them. On one occasion the wife of one man who had been found within our lines and sentenced, came to Lincoln to plead for her husband. After listening to her Lincoln said, "Is your husband a good man? Is he good to you and your children or does he beat them and treat you badly?" She said, "Oh, no, he is a good husband and a good father and he loves me and the children and we cannot do without him. The only trouble with him is he is a fool about politics. He was born in the South. If you will pardon him and turn him over to me, I will see that he never fights for the South again." Then said Lincoln, "I will pardon him and I will turn him over to you for safe keeping," and the woman overcome with joy broke down in convulsive sobbing. And then the great President looked down on her and said, "If I but know this would have given you so much trouble, I would not have pardoned him." At another time a father was pleading for his son who was sentenced to be shot, and after hearing him Lincoln sent for his aide and said, "Telegraph General Butler to suspend action in this case until further orders from me." The father looked at the President and said, "I can't take that message to that boy's mother. She is almost broken hearted now and she will feel less if you change your mind." Lincoln said, "I will have to do the best I can in this administration. My Generals tell me how that I have overstepped the bounds, but you go home and tell that boy's mother that if he lives until they get further orders from me, people will say when they hear of his death, that Methuselah was a babe compared to him."

Lincoln said, "I want it said of me that I plucked a thistle and I planted a flower for the glory of God."

Lincoln's addresses always illustrated the point. He had learned that in talking at the county prosecutor, and just as St. Paul could preach the Gospel so that it was understood by Jew and Gentile, so Lincoln could talk so that all men could understand him. And that characteristic in Lincoln was a powerful one. On one occasion some of my friends in the clergy came down to complain to the President of General Grant, the only General he had who was doing anything, because he was drinking, and Lincoln replied to them, that if they knew where he could get the same brand of liquor that Grant drank he would buy that liquor for some of the other Generals. At one time it was said that Lincoln was not meeting the Christians of the South in the proper spirit and according to Mr. Greeley he ought to send a commissioner to meet their commissioners (that was before we had reciprocity). Lincoln saw the humor of the situation, and he immediately appointed Greeley on that commission. Of course, Greeley failed in his commission. Lincoln's magnificent humor first exposed the habits of the people, and yet no words of ridicule, no facetious cartoons, nor the severest criticisms were too hard to be used against this kindest, this gentlest of men. One of the strange characteristics of us people who think we love fair play, is that we take politicians as a whole and have a bad impression of them and do not give them fair judgment. "Judge not that ye be not judged" is too little practised in this land of ours. Reference to this injustice which at times almost broke Lincoln's heart is made strong as a moral for observation,—Kind treatment for our public men. There was nothing to mar his character and his enemies went chastened tears of sorrow and sympathy at his death. The London Punch, one of the bitterest foes Lincoln had, wrote at the time of his death,

Besides this corpse that bears for winding sheet
The stars and stripes he lived to defend and save,
Between the mourners at his head and feet,
Say, scurril—jester, is there room for you?

Yes, he had lived to shame me from my sneer,
To lame my pencil, and confute my pen—
To make me own this blud of princes peer,
This rail splitter, a true-born king of men.

Ah, yes, Lincoln' charity as a master barred nothing and his fame will grow greater and greater as the years roll on, just as Shakespeare's does in literature and Moses' in Israel, because he was a great, good man. When the curtain fell upon the last scene at Appomattox and the war was ended and Lincoln had triumphed over all forms of opposition, it fired the country, saved the Union, gave emancipation to the slaves and when his judgment and achievements had been paraded before the world, he was the supreme hero of the hour. In the moment of triumph he went down to Richmond and walking up from the station to the Capitol Square almost unattended some one took his arm and said, "Look Mr. Lincoln, there is your flag waving over their Capitol," and Lincoln looked up and he saw the stars and stripes waving over the building from which Jefferson Davis had just fled and a feeling almost ineffable glory lit up his countenance as he realized that the maximum of his life had come, that this glorious banner waving over the dome of the Confederacy told the triumph of the Union.

The story of his death amid the general rejoicings of the Nation you all know. April 14th, 1865, his eyelids closed and his head fell upon his breast in peace. The age of miracles, we are pleased to say, is gone, but the age of an ever-living, personal God, who marks our footsteps as He watches the fall of the sparrow is still with us. Lincoln's fame and crown of immortality cannot be measured by human standards. He came and went as a messenger and shall we not say that the lowly boy born in the Kentucky woods was sent to save the Union and to free the slaves and that when his work was done, God called him back to his home in the skies?

All about us are the things he left. There is the black man and his freedom; there is the school boy and his declamation; there is the hope of the lowy and opportunities he may possess, the inspiration of his example; there is the justice of American Institutions which he originated and the call of privilege and opportunity he bequeathed. There is glory shining in the unsullied honor that carried liberty to Cuba and a new hope to the burned-skinned race at Manilla, and there above the misery of battles and despotism of death is heard the sweet obligato of the "mantee toward none and charity for all." The master spirit of the Republic, he touches the chords of memory and wakes the better thoughts; he is the Nation's offering, his birth a sacrament, his life a prayer, his death a benediction.

Radiation of the Sun.

As a result of the action of Congress at the last session in making a special appropriation of $5,000 for the purpose, Dr. C. G. Abbot, director of the Smithsonian Institute, will be able to complete within the next year an investigation which was begun in 1905 and which, if it arrives at the expected conclusion, will result in a discovery of the first rank, such as is not often made in astronomical work.

This investigation is expected to prove that the radiation of the sun varies and that this variation produces a corresponding variation in the temperature of the earth. While his discovery, if made, will have its highest value for pure science, it will also be of great benefit in its application to agriculture, to long distance weather forecasts and other practical purposes.

In speaking of the work, Dr. Abbot says, "When we began to make these measurements there was nowhere in the world any exact scale of measurement of radiation, although physicians had been working to devising instruments for that purpose for about sixty years. Still there remained an uncertainty of 5 to 10 per cent. in the scale of pyrheliometry, as it is called. We have devised several instruments to be used as standards for that purpose, and in this past year we have made a careful comparison of two of our instruments of our most improved type, and these agree perfectly in fixing the scale of measurements.

"This apparatus is used now as a standard by which to standardize other apparatus which has been sent around the world. We have sent instruments to France and Italy and have requests for them from Argentina, Peru and other countries."

Peppered Ice Cream.

"There's pepper in that," said a restaurant waiter, pointing to a small silver shaker he had placed beside a heaping dish of ice cream he was carrying to a guest. "Sure, it's to put on the ice cream, too," he replied when an inquirer failed to see the connection between the two.

"Lots of folks want to put pepper on their ices. You see, if a man's stomach is sensitive the cold cream hurts him, but pepper is stimulating enough to overcome the effects of the cold. And the funny thing is that you don't taste the pepper at all. The ice cream is so cold that it kills the other. If you don't believe it I'll give you some with pepper, and you'll find that there's no taste of pepper there at all."

Miles' Grave.

"Which is the deepest, the longest, the broadest and the smallest grave in the churchyard?" said a pedestrian to his companion while meditating among the tombs in the burying ground at Esher.

"Why," replied his companion, "it is that in which poor Miles Button lies buried, for it contains Miles below the sod, Miles in length and Miles in breadth, and yet, after all, it is but a Button-hole."—Pearson's Weekly.

Effect of Tight Lacing.

"Is tight lacing unwise?" a teacher asked a young lady in a physiology lesson.

"Yes, it is very unwise," was the reply.

"Why is it unwise?" the teacher pursued.

"Because it busts the corset," said the young lady.—Exchange.

Davis missed the team and believing it to be stolen telephoned to the State Police at Langhorne. The troopers rode this way and found Scannel cruelly beating the horse and driving it unmercifully. They then took him into custody. Scannell was required to pay $10 fine and costs.

Every day or so you see in the papers that some man has accepted a position. This is merely a warning to a young man who wants to get along in the world to steer clear of the accepting a position racket. Nine chances out of ten the man who has accepted the position has been breaking his neck to get it, and he might as well confess that he got a job as to announce that he has accepted a position. Young man, if you are too much afraid of your reputation to let the world know that you have landed a job you are too fine in the hat to ever deserve much of a job, and if you are sidetracked into the accepted-a-position class the fault is your own. When you go into the world make it on the basis of hustling for a job. The world will rate you as a success if you can hustle a job, but it will put you down with the stand-and-wait crowd if it sees you accepting a position. The difference is that one fellow chases up the thing he wants and lands it, while the other takes what come his way. The one is capable of bringing business to his feet. The other is a follower at the tail of the wagon. Don't accept a position. Go out and get a job. Don't accept anything if you want to be master of a factor in the world of get along.

POSTOFFICE MAY GO TO 4TH WARD

Treasury Department Official Here Looking at Sites for New Government Building.

Frederick Brackett, an official connected with the United States Treasury Department, of Washington, D. C., was in Bristol several days this week going over the ground inspecting prospective sites for the new postoffice building.

The government owns a site upon which it was intended to locate the new building at the corner of Mulberry and Pond streets which was purchased some time ago. Since that site was acquired upon the payment of $8000 the Pennsylvania railroad company determined to move its local passenger station from the present location to the vicinity of Beaver Dam road and Prospect street fully half-a-mile away.

During the closing hours of the last session of Congress, Representative Wanger succeeded in having an amendment to the Sundry Civil Appropriation bill adopted which granted authority to exchange the Mulberry and Pond street plot for a plot near the proposed new passenger station, any difference in the price in favor of the government to be paid into the United States Treasury.

Mr. Brackett's errand here this week therefore, was to investigate other locations. In conversation with a Gazette representative on Monday he said that the new government building will, according to the policy of the department, be erected in the vicinity of Beaver Dam road, Jefferson avenue and Prospect street, west of the canal, as there was no location east of the canal which could be used that would bring the postoffice within the required distance of the railroad. In order to get free delivery the railroad company of mail sacks and pouches to the postoffice Mr. Brackett said the distance between the two points must be within 1320 feet.

On Tuesday the Washington official interviewed a number of Bristol business men concerning the location of the building. When asked by Mr. Brackett, Walter E. Leedom, said, "By all means place the postoffice in the Fourth ward. That locality won out in the station fight and that's where the building should go. I am in favor of the Fourth ward. Put it along side of Pete's ice plant."

LAFAYETTE ST. FIRE

Firemen Conquer a Threatening Blaze While a High Wind Was Blowing.

The prompt and highly efficient work of the Bristol fire companies averted a serious conflagration yesterday morning.

A double frame dwelling, 431 and 433 Lafayette street caught fire from a defective flue and in a few moments the whole roof and the attics of the two dwellings were ablaze. A high wind was blowing at the time and the flames were fanned to such an extent that the whole row of houses adjoining were endangered.

The two houses were occupied by the families of Michael Angelo and Luggi Missera, Italians. Edward Renk, an employee of the Pennsylvania Railroad, who was passing at the time, first discovered the fire and turned in an alarm from box 26 at Steel's mill.

The fire companies were on the ground in a few moments and had several streams of water soon on the flames. The roof covering the two houses was destroyed and the attic rooms pretty well burned out, but the only damage to other portions of the houses will be from the effects of the water.

Praise for the work of the volunteer firemen was heard on every hand in the crowd of spectators, as a high wind was blowing and the fire had considerable start before the alarm was turned in, the whole roof being ablaze when the fire fighters arrived.

WATER STOCK SOLD FOR $21 A SHARE

There was a public sale of eight shares of the capital stock of the Bristol Water Company in front of the Farmers National Bank on Tuesday morning. The stock was sold by the Girard Trust Company, trustee of the estate of Harriet Biddle.

Five shares were first offered and were purchased by G. M. Dorrance, Esq., the president of the water company for $21 per share. The bidding started at $10 per share. The second allotment of three shares was also purchased by Mr. Dorrance for $20 per share. The par value of the stock is $25, but has sold as high as $56 per share, before the borough threatened competition by the erection of a municipal plant.

At the conclusion of the sale Mr. Dorrance announced to the gathering that he was ready to purchase every share of the company's stock at the price that prevailed at the sale and would pay spot cash. He declared the stock is as valuable as it ever was.

Judge Differs With James.

Doylestown Democrat.

Judge Staples said that he had learned that there was no probation officer at Bristol and thought there should be one for a borough of that size. He appointed Mrs. K. S. Peirce to fill the office.

"What can you do with your young people when arrested? Have you a place in Bristol where they can be kept?" asked the court of Howard L. James, Esq. The latter replied that there was no place in the borough where they could be kept.

"Have you no Children's Aid Society in the borough?" asked the Judge.

"No," replied Mr. James, "we have no need for one in Bristol."

"Well," said the court, "judging from the signs of the times, I think different."

"Dutchy" Goes Back.

John, better known in Bristol as "Dutchy" Eldredge, was released from the county jail last Thursday afternoon having spent four months behind the bars. He returned to his familiar haunts in Bristol and was here but a few hours when he got "loaded" and commenced cutting up in his usual reckless manner. He tried to get into the Family Theatre on Mill street, but Norman Hagan, the ticket taker, refused him entrance. A wrestling match ensued during the progress of which Officer McLaughlin happened along and took him to the station house. When searched by the officer a bottle of liquor was found in his vest. A fault of $10 fine imposed by Squire Kraft, "Dutchy" was returned to the county jail for thirty days. He has spent nearly half his life behind the bars.

Elks Home Open to Visitors.

At the regular meeting of Bristol Lodge of Elks, held on Monday evening a resolution was adopted, suspending the house rules for one month whereby the building will be open for free public inspection for the next four Sundays from 10 a. m. until 5 p. m. The public is cordially welcomed to view the premises.

The Atlantic City re-union committee of the lodge has reported that it has engaged ample headquarters at the hotel Ponce de Leon, during the Elks re-union in July. The Bristol lodge will go in a body uniformed in white crash suits, with Fedora hats to match, with purple band, and a purple band around sleeve containing name of lodge in white embroidery, purple necktie and white shoes. A band has been engaged to accompany the delegates.

Italian Struck Foreman.

Michael Angenelle, an Italian, was held Monday night in $200 bail for court at a hearing before Squire Kraft charged with assault and battery by Michael King of Walnut street, Bristol, section foreman for the Pennsylvania Railroad. King alleged that on January 12th the defendant struck him in the face while working to replace a broken rail at Mill street. King declares Angenelle had a provocation for this act other than that he had been cautioned to hurry to his work.

Not satisfied with striking him once, said King, Angenelle lay in wait for him from eleven o'clock to twelve at the house and then hit him so hard that two of his ribs were fractured and he was laid up for six weeks.

Angenelle admitted at the hearing that he had struck King and declared he did it because the latter had "cussed" him.

Gilkeson Presents Two Bills.

Representative Franklin Gilkeson presented two bills in the House of Representatives this week. One measure is to permit the catching of shad in the Delaware river below Trenton Falls after midnight of Sunday nights. The law now prohibits catching shad in this river between noon Saturday and 6 a. m. Monday. The new act would allow fishing before daylight on Monday mornings.

On Monday night Mr. Gilkeson introduced a bill the purpose of which is to add to the reduction of the costs of court cases by regulating the employment of stenographers in legal proceedings. The bill is an amendment to the present law on the subject, and provides that it shall be the duty of the official stenographer of the court to transcribe and file in all cases a copy of his notes and to prepare and furnish a carbon copy of the notes so transcribed to counsel on each side of the case being tried or heard, without charge and without any order of court. The bill also provides for the selection of competent stenographers other than official stenographers by examiners, masters in chancery, special masters, referees, commissioners, auditors, or other like officers with or without the agreement of the parties concerned.

NO RESTRICTED LIQUOR LICENSES

Supreme Court Holds that a License Means Privilege to Sell all Kinds of Liquor.

The decision of the Supreme Court in a West Chester case is of a great deal of interest to holders of what is called "restaurant" licenses in Bucks county. A restaurant license granted by the local court is a privilege to sell beer and malt beverages but not whiskey.

The practice of granting these sort of licenses obtains only in Bucks, Montgomery and Chester counties. Dauphin and York formerly had such practice but have stopped it. The case in which the decision was given is told in the following press dispatch, dated West Chester, March 20:

A message from the Prothonotary of the Supreme Court announces that the highest tribunal has reversed a judgment of the Chester County Court in sentencing James Spence, formerly proprietor of an eating-house here, to pay a fine of $500 and costs, and to serve three months in jail for illegal liquor selling. Spence's place was closed by the Court, and after he had served about 20 days of his sentence he took an appeal and was liberated on bail.

The high Court now sustains his appeal, and declares that there is "no such thing as an eating-house license here, but that license means a privilege to sell all kinds of liquors. For many years in Chester county it has been the custom to grant eating-house licenses, permitting the sale of beer, ale, etc., only.

HORSE THIEVES BUSY

Pair of Horses Stolen from St. Francis Industrial School--$300 Reward Offered.

Horse thieves continue to ply their trade in the lower end of the county and the police authorities and horse companies so far have been unsuccessful in tracing the culprits or in obtaining any clues or the whereabouts of the stolen property.

On Thursday night or early Friday morning of last week a pair of gray horses and a no-top express wagon were stolen from the stable of the St. Francis Industrial School at Edgington. Although the police authorities at Bristol, Philadelphia and Trenton were early notified of the theft, no evidence has been obtained as to who the thief was or what became of the team.

Thomas Cleary, the watchman at the school was off duty last Thursday night, but it is known that the horses were in the stable at eleven o'clock. The stable is only a short distance from the farm house, but no suspicious noises were heard during the night. To get to the main road it was necessary to drive the team down a long lane past several buildings. Tracks indicated that the horses were driven toward Trenton.

The animals which were stolen were a gray horse and a gray mare, about eleven years old and weigh about 1300 each. The horse has a habit of throwing its head up and down and the mare has a cut on the left side on each shoulder. The wagon had "St. Francis Industrial School" painted on the side in large yellow letters.

The Newportville Horse Company has offered $300 reward, $100 for the recovery of the team and $200 for the arrest and conviction of the thief.

DIED ON THE TRAIN

About three o'clock last Friday afternoon a fast express train, which was not scheduled to stop here halted at the Bristol station and a passenger was taken from one of the day coaches placed on a stretcher and carried to the baggage office.

The man proved to be William Hoehman, of Trenton, who, accompanied by his wife, was on his way to a Philadelphia hospital for treatment for heart disease.

When the train neared Bristol Mr. Hoehman was stricken and the conductor stopped the train here. Dr. Frank Lehman was summoned, and although he arrived at the station in a few moments he pronounced the man dead. Mr. Hechman was apparently about fifty years old. His wife became hysterical when she realized that her husband was dead.

Harvey S. Rue, the undertaker, took charge of the body and prepared it for shipment back to Trenton.

A Dorrance Street Fight.

Three Burlington chaps, Joseph Hart, Frank Hartman and Walter Jones, were arrested Saturday night for "disorderly house" conduct at the corner of Dorrance and Pond streets. From what can be gleaned of the particulars of the affair it is reported that the three Jersey bloods started a fight in the house of Thomas Banes, near the railroad and the scrimmage was continued on the street evidently after one or more of the young men had been ejected from the premises.

At 9 o'clock the station house was called on the 'phone and the police informed that a fight was going on at the end of Dorrance street, and that police interference was needed.

Officer Sackville was on duty at the station house and he called in Officers McLaughlin and Mussulf and the three went to the Banes' residence on Dorrance street. The officers entered the house and found two men and several bottles of beer. Upon inquiring it was stated that the fracas was caused by four Burlington men who had left and gone down town. The officers proceeded to Mill street and located three of the fellows at a Mill street restaurant. They were put under arrest. They gave their names as above, and were locked up over night.

At a hearing before Squire Kraft on Sunday morning they were sentenced to pay a fine of $10 each and costs. It was stated that the fight started in the kitchen of the Banes house between Hart and Hartman.

My Prayer.

The following prayer with the above caption was written by William H. J. Wilson, of New York, a former Bristolian and was sent to this office by Mr. Wilson printed on a card surmounted by an etching of the Crucifix:

MY PRAYER.

Jesus of Nazareth don't pass me by,
Be ever with me is my daily cry,
Let thy face ever shine on me,
That I may not sin, but live with thee.

Jesus, Son of Mary dear,
Bless me, keep me, always in fear,
Lest I fall and regret thou'rt near,
Jesus, Son of Mary dear.

Jesus abide with me this day,
And show me the light for which I pray,
Where as thy blood was shed for me,
To strengthen my soul while I wait for thee.

A Tabor Story.

Count Boyenta, Mme. Modjeska's husband, was arranging with Senator Tabor for Modjeska's first appearance in Denver, and the founder of dramatic art in Denver asked what parts she played.

"Well," said the count, "there is 'Mary Stuart.'"

"Who wrote it?" asked Tabor.

"Schiller," said the count.

"Is he a first class dramatist?" asked Tabor.

"Surely, surely," said the count. "He is most illustrious."

"Humph! Never heard of him," commented Tabor. "What else does she do?"

"'As You Like It,' 'Antony and Cleopatra,' 'Macbeth'"—

"Who wrote them?"

"Shakespeare."

"How's he? Good writer?"

"Excellent, excellent."

"Well," said Tabor ruminatively, "those fellows may be all right as authors, but they ain't well enough known to suit the people out here. What we want is something popular, something that everybody's heard of. I tell you what you do—you get her to give us something of Hoyt's!"

Fearful Fate of Ravallac.

In these days when executions, if held at all, are mostly carried out in private, it is difficult for us to understand the feelings of savagery with which an old time mob witnessed a popular execution. Here is Blondelle Burton's account—from "The Fate of Henry of Navarre"—of the scene when Ravallac, the assassin of the king, had, after shocking tortures, been torn asunder by wild horses: "The executioner had begun to dismember him and was about to cast his remains into the second caldron when the vast crowd prevented him from doing so. They each required a portion of the body of the king's assassin, and most of them obtained one. That night many bonfires blazed in and around Paris, and in their midst were consumed pieces of Ravallac's frame; on barn doors in other places were nailed similar scraps of his body, as hawks and owls and carrion crows were nailed as a warning to others of their breed."

BIDS FOR SEWERS AND WATERWORKS

Host of Bidders Submit Estimates for Constructing Bristol Utilities.

Last Monday at noon, the hour set by the Street committee of the borough council to open the bids for furnishing materials and constructing a complete municipal system of water works, filtration plant and sewerage system and disposal plant, the office of Franklin Gilkeson was crowded with fully a half hundred representatives of firms, and individuals who had submitted bids.

A few minutes after 12 o'clock Joseph R. Grundy, chairman of the Street committee, announced the time of the appointed hour for opening the bids had arrived. Messrs. Boardman and Witham, engineers representing the borough, opened the sealed packages which contained the estimates and read them by items, which occupied two hours time.

There were very few estimates furnished for the construction of the complete plants. Firms that made specifications of various materials, as pipe, engines, pumps, tanks, etc., submitted bids on those items alone.

Messrs Boardman and Witham since the bids were received have been busy scheduling and tabulating the estimates. It is anticipated that the figures will be made public today or tomorrow. The borough has authorized the issue of bonds for $100,000 for the construction of a water works and filtration system and $63,000 for a sewer system and disposal plant.

WATER BIDS.

The few bids received for the construction of complete water supply system were as follows:

Bowman Construction Co., of Mc-Keesport, Pa., $107,138.46.

United Paving Co., of Atlantic City, $107,512.55.

F. F. Ivey Co., Springfield, Mass., $109,000.

B. F. Sweeten Co., $118,000.

C. Diehler, $110,630.12.

SEWER BIDS.

There were but three complete sewer bids, as follows:

United Paving Co., of Atlantic City, $89,270.

B. F. Sweeten Co., $100,000.

F. T. Bacius, $101,704.07.

MAY BE LITIGATION.

It is declared positively that as soon as the attempt is made to carry into effect the construction of a water system an injunction will be applied for by interests friendly to the Bristol Water Co. It is reported that the litigation will be based upon other grounds than that which was the basis of a former suit against the borough by the water company. If suit is to be instituted in all probability it will again have to be fought through the common pleas and supreme courts.

LAFAYETTE ST. FIRE

Firemen Conquer a Threatening Blaze While a High Wind Was Blowing.

The prompt and highly efficient work of the Bristol fire companies averted a serious conflagration yesterday morning.

A double frame dwelling, 484 and 486 Lafayette street caught fire from a defective flue and in a few moments the whole roof and the attics of the two dwellings were ablaze. A high wind was blowing at the time and the flames were fanned to such an extent that the whole row of houses adjoining were endangered.

The two houses were occupied by the families of Michael Angelo and Luggi Misera, Italians. Edward Renk, an employee of the Pennsylvania Railroad, who was passing at the time, first discovered the fire and turned in an alarm from box 26 at Steel's mill.

The fire companies were on the ground in a few moments and had several streams of water soon on the flames. The two occupying the two houses was destroyed and the attic rooms pretty well burned out, but the only damage to other portions of the houses will be from the effects of the water.

Praise for the work of the volunteer firemen was heard on every hand in the crowd of spectators, as a high wind was blowing and the fire had considerable start before the alarm was turned in, the whole roof being ablaze when the fire fighters arrived.

WATER STOCK SOLD FOR $21 A SHARE

There was a public sale of eight shares of the capital stock of the Bristol Water Company in front of the Farmers National Bank on Tuesday morning. The stock was sold by the Girard Trust Company, trustee of the estate of Harriet Biddle.

Five shares were first offered and were purchased by G. M. Dorrance, Esq., the president of the water company for $21 per share. The bidding started at $10 per share. The second allotment of three shares was also purchased by Mr. Dorrance for $20 per share. The par value of the stock is $25, but has sold as high as $50 per share, before the borough threatened competition by the erection of a municipal plant.

At the conclusion of the sale Mr. Dorrance announced to the gathering that he was ready to purchase any share of the company's stock at the price that prevailed at the sale and would pay spot cash. He declared the stock is as valuable as it ever was.

Treasury Department Official Here Looking at Sites for New Government Building.

Frederick Brackett, an official connected with the United States Treasury Department, of Washington, D. C. was in Bristol several days this week going over the ground inspecting prospective sites for the new postoffice building.

The government owns a site upon which it was intended to locate the new building at the corner of Mulberry and Pond streets which was purchased some time ago. Since that site was acquired upon the payment of $9000 the Pennsylvania railroad company determined to move its local passenger station from the present location to the vicinity of Beaver Dam road and Prospect street fully half-a-mile away.

During the closing hours of the last session of Congress, Representative Wanger succeeded in having an amendment to the Sundry Civil Appropriation bill adopted which granted authority to exchange the Mulberry and Pond street plot for a plot near the proposed new passenger station, any difference in the price in favor of the government to be paid into the United States Treasury.

Mr. Brackett's errand here this week therefore, was to investigate other locations. In conversation with a Gazette representative on Monday he said that the new government building will, according to the policy of the department, be erected in the vicinity of Beaver Dam road, Jefferson avenue and Prospect street, west of the canal, as there was no location east of the canal which could be used that would bring the postoffice within the required distance of the railroad. In order to get free delivery by the railroad company or mail sacks and pouches to the postoffice Mr. Brackett said the distance between the two points must be within 1320 feet.

On Tuesday the Washington official interviewed a number of Bristol business men concerning the location of the building. When asked by Mr. Brackett, Walter E. Beedom, said, "By all means place the postoffice in the Fourth ward. That locality was out in the station fight and that's where the building should go. I am in favor of the Fourth ward. Put it along side of Pete's ice plant."

LAFAYETTE ST. FIRE

Firemen Conquer a Threatening Blaze While a High Wind Was Blowing.

The prompt and highly efficient work of the Bristol fire companies averted a serious conflagration yesterday morning.

A double frame dwelling, 484 and 486 Lafayette street caught fire from a defective flue and in a few moments the whole roof and the attics of the two dwellings were ablaze. A high wind was blowing at the time and the flames were fanned to such an extent that the whole row of houses adjoining were endangered.

The two houses were occupied by the families of Michael Angelo and Luggi Misera, Italians. Edward Renk, an employee of the Pennsylvania Railroad, who was passing at the time, first discovered the fire and turned in an alarm from box 26 at Steel's mill.

The fire companies were on the ground in a few moments and had several streams of water soon on the flames. The two occupying the two houses was destroyed and the attic rooms pretty well burned out, but the only damage to other portions of the houses will be from the effects of the water.

Praise for the work of the volunteer firemen was heard on every hand in the crowd of spectators, as a high wind was blowing and the fire had considerable start before the alarm was turned in, the whole roof being ablaze when the fire fighters arrived.

"Dutchy" Goes Back.

John, better known in Bristol as "Dutchy" Eldredge, was released from the county jail last Thursday afternoon having spent four months behind the bars. He returned to his familiar haunts in Bristol and was here but a few hours when he got "loaded" and commenced cutting up in his usual reckless manner. He tried to get into the Family Theatre on Mill street, but Norman Dugan, the ticket taker, refused him entrance. A wrestling match ensued during the progress of which Officer McLaughlin happened along and took him to the station house. When searched by the officer a bottle of liquor was found. In default of $10 fine imposed by Squire Kraft, "Dutchy" was returned to the county jail for thirty days. He has spent nearly half his life behind the bars.

Italian Struck Foreman.

Michael Angenelle, an Italian, was held Monday night in $200 bail for court at a hearing before Squire Kraft charged with assault and battery by Michael King of Walnut street, Bristol, section foreman for the Pennsylvania Railroad. King alleged that on January 12th the defendant struck him in the face while working to replace a broken rail at Mill street. King declares Angenelle had no provocation for this other than that he had been cautioned to hurry to his work.

Not satisfied with striking him once, said King, Angenelle lay in wait for him from eleven o'clock to twelve at the house and then hit him so hard that two of his ribs were fractured and he was laid up for six weeks.

Angenelle admitted at the hearing that he had struck King and declared he did it because the latter had "cussed" him.

Gilkeson Presents Two Bills.

Representative Franklin Gilkeson presented two bills in the House of Representatives this week. One measure is to permit the catching of shad in the Delaware river below Trenton Falls after midnight of Sunday nights. The law now prohibits catching shad in this river between noon Saturday and 6 a. m. Monday. The new act would allow fishing before daylight on Monday mornings.

On Monday night Mr. Gilkeson introduced a bill the purpose of which is to aid in the reduction of the costs of court cases by regulating the employment of stenographers in legal proceedings. The bill is an amendment to the present law on the subject, and provides that it shall be the duty of the official stenographer of the court to transcribe and file in all cases a copy of his notes and to prepare and furnish a carbon copy of the notes so transcribed to counsel on each side of the case being tried or heard, without charge and without any order of court. The bill also provides for the selection of competent stenographers other than official stenographers by examining ... there in chancery special masters, commissioners, auditors or like officers with or without ... consent of the parties con...

NO RESTRICTED LIQUOR LICENSES

Supreme Court Holds that a License Means Privilege to Sell all Kinds of Liquor.

The decision of the Supreme Court in a West Chester case is of a great deal of interest to holders of what is called "restaurant" licenses in Bucks county. A restaurant license granted by the local court is a privilege to sell beer and malt beverages but not whiskey.

The practice of granting these sort of licenses obtains only in Bucks, Montgomery and Chester counties. Dauphin and York formerly had such practice but have stopped it. The case in which the decision was given is told in the following press dispatch, dated West Chester, March 20:

A message from the Prothonotary of the Supreme Court announces that the highest tribunal has reversed a judgment of the Chester County Court in sentencing James Spence, formerly proprietor of an eating-house here, to pay a fine of $500 and costs, and to serve three months in jail for illegal liquor selling. Spence's place was closed by the Court, and after he had served about 20 dys of his sentence he took an appeal and was liberated on bail.

The high Court now sustains his appeal, and declares that there is "no such thing as an eating-house license or restricted license, but that license means a privilege to sell all kinds of liquors. For many years in Chester county it has been the custom to grant eating-house licenses, permitting the sale of beer, ale, etc., only.

HORSE THIEVES BUSY

Pair of Horses Stolen from St. Francis Industrial School--$300 Reward Offered.

Horse thieves continue to ply their trade in the lower end of the county and the police authorities and horse companies so far have been unsuccessful in tracing the culprits or in obtaining any clues or the whereabouts of the stolen property.

On Thursday night or early Friday morning of last week a pair of gray horses and a no-top express wagon were stolen from the stable of the St. Francis Industrial School at Eddington. Although the police authorities at Bristol, Philadelphia and Trenton were early notified of the theft, no evidence has been obtained as to who the thief was or what became of the team.

Thomas Cleary, the watchman at the school was off duty last Thursday night, but it is known that the horses were in the stable at eleven o'clock. The stable is only a short distance from the farm house, but no suspicious noises were heard during the night. To get to the main road it was necessary to drive the team down a long lane past several buildings. Tracks indicated that the horses were driven toward Trenton.

The animals which were stolen were a gray horse and a gray mare, about eleven years old and weighed about 1300 each. The horse has a habit of throwing its head up and down and the mare has a collar boil scar on each shoulder. The wagon had "St. Francis Industrial School" painted on the side in large yellow letters.

The Newportville Horse Company has offered $300 reward, $100 for the recovery of the team and $200 for the arrest and conviction of the thief.

DIED ON THE TRAIN

About three o'clock last Friday afternoon a fast express train, which was not scheduled to stop here halted at the Bristol station and a passenger was taken from one of the day coaches placed on a stretcher and carried to the baggage office.

The man proved to be William Hochman, of Trenton, who, accompanied by his wife, was on his way to a Philadelphia hospital for treatment for heart disease.

When the train neared Bristol Mr. Hochman was stricken and the conductor stopped the train here. Dr. Frank Lehman was summoned, and although he arrived at the station in a few moments he pronounced the man dead. Mr. Hochman was apparently about fifty years old. His wife became hysterical when she realized that her husband was dead.

Harvey S. Rue, the undertaker, took charge of the body and prepared it for shipment back to Trenton.

A Dorrance Street Fight.

Three Burlington chaps, Joseph Hart, Frank Hartman and Walter Jones, were arrested Saturday night for "rough house" conduct at the corner of Dorrance and Pond streets. From what can be gleaned of the particulars of the affair it is reported that the three Jersey bloods started a fight in the house of Thomas Banes, near the railroad and the scrimmage was continued on the street evidently after one of the parties to the young men had been ejected from the premises.

About 11 o'clock the station house was called on the 'phone and the police informed that a fight was going on at the end of Dorrance street, and that police interference was needed.

Officer Sackville was on duty at the station house and he called in Officers McLaughlin and Musnuff and the three went to the Banes' residence on Dorrance street. The officers entered the house and found two men and several bottles of beer. Upon inquiring it was stated that the fracas was caused by four Burlington men who had left and gone down town. The officers proceeded to Mill street and located three of the fellows at a Mill street restaurant. They were put under arrest. They gave their names as above, and were locked up over night.

At a hearing before Squire Kraft on Sunday morning they were sentenced to pay a fine of $10 each and costs. It was stated that the fight started in the kitchen of the Banes house between Hart and Hartman.

My Prayer.

The following prayer with the above caption was written by William H. J. Wilson, of New York, a former Bristolian and was sent to this office by Mr. Wilson printed on a card surmounted by an etching of the Crucifix:

MY PRAYER.

Jesus of Nazareth don't pass me by,
He ever with me is my daily cry,
Let thy face ever shine on me,
That I may not sin, but live with thee.

Jesus, Son of Mary dear.
Bless me, keep me, always in fear,
Lest I fall and forget thou'rt near,
Jesus, Son of Mary dear.

Jesus abide with me this day,
And show me the light for which I pray,
Where as thy blood was shed for me,
To strengthen any soul while I wait for thee.

THE GIRL AND THE HABIT

Tale of the Transition of a Restaurant Cashier

By O. HENRY

Habit—A tendency or aptitude acquired by custom or frequent repetition.

The critics have assailed every source of inspiration save one. To that one we are driven for our moral theme. When we levied upon the masters of old they gleefully dug up the parallels to our columns. When we strove to set forth real life they reproached us for trying to imitate Henry George, George Washington Washington Irving and Irving Bacheller. We wrote of the west and the east ... attacked by friends. A writer would have seen the opportunity ... despot and seized the leaders of ... Republic and sat himself upon the throne, but this man never falters and ... the grandeur of the power he ... wielded, he remains the simplest, ... gentlest of men crying with ... fatherless and shedding his tears ... the soldiers' graves ... no man can understand the ... subject of Lincoln without some moral, unassailable vade mecum—the unabridged dictionary

Miss Merriam was cashier at Hinkle's. Hinkle's is one of the big downtown restaurants. It is in what the papers call the "financial district." Each day from 12 to 2 Hinkle's was full of hungry customers messenger boys stenographers, brokers, owners of mining stock, promoters inventors with patents pending and also people with money

The cashiership at Hinkle's was no sinecure. Hinkle egged and toasted and griddlecaked and coffeed a good many customers and he lunched (as good a word as dined) many more. It might be said that Hinkle's breakfast crowd was a contingent but his lunch patronage amounted to a horde

Miss Merriam sat on a stool at a desk inclosed on three sides by a strong high fencing of woven brass wire. Through an arched opening at the bottom you thrust your waiter's check and the money while your heart went pitapat

For Miss Merriam was lovely and capable. She could take 45 cents out of a two dollar bill and refuse an offer of marriage before you could—Next—lost your chance—please don't shove. She could keep cool and collected while she collected your check give you the correct change win your heart indicate the toothpick stand and rate you to a quarter of a cent better than Bradstreets could to a thousand in less time than it takes to pepper an egg with one of Hinkle's casters

There is an old and dignified allusion to the "fierce light that beats upon a throne." The light that beats upon the young lady cashier's cage is also something fierce. The other fellow is responsible for the slang

Every male patron of Hinkle's, from the A D T boys up to the curbstone brokers, adored Miss Merriam. When they paid their checks they wooed her with every wile known to Cupid ... Between the meshes of the brass railing went smiles, winks, compliments, tender vows, invitations to dinner, sighs, languishing looks and merry banter that was wafted pointedly back by the gifted Miss Merriam

There is no coign of vantage more effective than the position of young lady cashier. She sits there easily queen of the court of commerce. She is duchess of dollars and devoir, countess of compliments and coin, leading lady of love and luncheon. You take from her a smile and a Canadian dime and you go your way uncomplaining. You count the cheery word or two that she tosses you misers count their treasures and you pocket the change for a five uncounted. Perhaps the ... of her ... accessibility ... her ... Anyhow she is a shirt waisted ... immaculate ... tive, bright eyed ... Circe and Ate in ... from your circulating ... your sirloin medium

The young men who b... Hinkle's never settled with the cashier without an exchange of badinage and open compliment. Many of them went to greater lengths and dropped promissory hints of theater tickets and chocolates. The older men spoke plainly of orange blossoms generally with ... the tentative petits by after allusions to Harlem flats. One broker who had been squeezed by copper proposed to Miss Merriam more regularly than he ate

During a brisk luncheon hour Miss Merriam's conversation while she took money for checks would run something like this

Good morning Mr Haskins—sir?—It's natural think you—don't be quite so fresh. Hello, Johnny, ten fifteen, twenty chase along now or they'll take the letters off your cap. Beg pardon—count it again please oh don't mention it. Vaudeville—thanks not on your moving picture—I was to see Carter in "Hedda Gabler" on Wednesday night with Mr Simmons. Scuse me I thought that was a quarter. Twenty five and seventy five's a dollar—got that ham and cabbage habit yet? I see, Billy. Who are you addressing? —say you'll get all that's coming to you in a minute. Oh fudge! Mr Bassett—you're always fooling no? Well, maybe I'll marry you some day—three four and sixty five is five. Kindly keep them remarks to yourself if you please. Ten cents?—scuse me, the check calls for seventy—well maybe it is a one instead of a seven. Oh do you like it that way, Mr Saunders?—some prefer a pomp, but they say his Cleo de Merody does suit refined features—and ten is fifty. Hike along there, buddy, don't take this for a Coney Island ticket booth. Huh?—why, Lacy's—don't it fit nice? Oh no it isn't too cool—these lightweight fabrics is all the go this season. Come again, please—that's the third time you've tried to—what?—forget it—that lead quarter is an old friend of mine. Sixty-five?—must have had your salary raised, Mr. ... I seen you on Sixth avenue ... afternoon, Mr. De Forest—swell?—oh, my!—who is she? What's the matter with it?—why, it ain't money—what—Columbian half?—well, this ain't South America. Yes, I like the mixed best—Friday?—awfully sorry but I take my jujutsu lesson on Friday—Thursday, then. Thanks—that's sixteen times I've been told that this morning—I guess I must be beautiful. Cut that out, please—who do you think I am? Why, Mr. Westbrook—do you really think so?—the idea!—one—eighty and twenty's a dollar—thin't you ever so much, but I don't ever go automobile riding with gentlemen—your aunt?—well, that's different—perhaps. Please don't get fresh—your check is 15 cents, I believe—kindly step aside and let—Hello Ben—coming around Thursday evening?—there's a gentleman going to send around a box of chocolates, and—forty and sixty is a dollar, and one is two."

About the middle of one afternoon the dizzy goddess Vertigo, whose other name is Fortune, suddenly smote an old wealthy and eccentric banker while he was walking past Hinkle's on his way to a street car. A wealthy and eccentric banker who rides in street cars is—move up, please; there others

A Samaritan, a Pharisee a man and a policeman who were first on the spot raised Banker McRamsey and carried him into Hinkle's restaurant. When the aged but indestructible banker opened his eyes he saw a beautiful vision bending over him, with a pitiful, tender smile bathing his forehead with ... tea and chafing his hands with something frappe out of a chafing dish. Mr McRamsey sighed, lost a vest button, gazed with deep gratitude upon his fair preserveress and then recovered consciousness

To the Seaside Library all who are anticipating a romance! Banker McRamsey had an aged and respected wife and his sentiments toward Miss Merriam were fatherly. He talked to her for half an hour with interest, not the kind that went with his talks during business hours. The next day he brought Mrs McRamsey down to see her. The old couple were childless. They had only a married daughter living in Brooklyn

To make a short story shorter, the beautiful cashier won the hearts of the good old couple. They came to Hinkle's again and again. They invited her to their old fashioned but splendid home in one of the East Seventies. Miss Merriam's winning loveliness, her sweet frankness and impulsive heart took them by storm. They said a hundred times that Miss Merriam reminded them so much of their lost daughter. The Brooklyn matron nee Ramsey, had the figure of Buddha and a face like the ideal of an art photographer. Miss Merriam was a combination of curves, smiles, rose leaves pearls satin and hair tonic posters. Enough of the fatuity of parents

A month after the worthy couple became acquainted with Miss Merriam she stood before Hinkle one afternoon and resigned her cashiership

"They're going to adopt me," she told the bereft restaurateur. "They're funny old people but regular dears

And the swell home they have got! Say, Hinkle, there isn't any use of talking. I'm on the a la carte to wear brown duds and goggles in a whiz wagon or marry a duke at least. Still, I somehow hate to break out of the old cage. I've been cashiering so long I feel funny doing anything else. I'll miss joshing the fellows awfully when they line up to pay for the buckwheats and But I can't let this chance slide. And they're awfully good, Hinkle, I know I'll have a swell time. You owe me nine sixty two and a half for the week. Cut out the half if it hurts you Hinkle"

And they did. Miss Merriam became Miss Rosa McRamsey. And she graced the transition. Beauty is only skin deep, but the nerves lie very near to the skin. Nerve—but just here will you oblige by perusing again the quotation with which this story begins?

The McRamseys poured out money like domestic champagne to polish their adopted one. Milliners, dancing masters and private tutors got it. Miss —er—McRamsey was grateful, loving and tried to forget Hinkle's. To give ample credit to the adaptability of the American girl, Hinkle's did fade from her memory and speech most of the time

Not every one will remember when the Earl of Hitesbury came to East Seventy —— street, America. He was only a fair to medium earl, without debts, and he created little excitement. But you will surely remember the evening when the Daughters of Benevolence held their bazaar in the W—f A—a hotel for you were there, and you wrote a note to Fannie on the hotel paper and mailed it, just to show her that—you did not? Very well; that was the evening the baby was sick, of course

At the bazaar the McRamseys were prominent. Miss Mer—er—McRamsey was exquisitely beautiful. The Earl of Hitesbury had been very attentive to her since he dropped in to have a look at America. At the charity bazaar the affair was supposed to be going to be pulled off to a finish. An earl is as good as a duke—better. His standing may be lower, but his outstanding accounts are also lower

Our ex young lady cashier was assigned to a booth. She was expected to sell worthless articles to nobs and snobs at exorbitant prices. The proceeds of the bazaar were to be used for giving to the poor children of the slums a Christmas din— Say did you ever wonder where they get the other 364? Miss McRamsey—beautiful palpitating, excited charming radiant—fluttered about in her booth. An imitation brass network with a little arched opening fenced her in

"YOUR CHECK, PLEASE."

Along came the earl assured delicate accurate admiring—admiring greatly—and faced the open wicket

"You look chawming, you know 'pon my word you do my deah," he said beguilingly

Miss McRamsey whirled around

"Cut that josling out," she said coolly and briskly. "Who do you think you are talking to? Your check, please. Oh, Lordy!"

Patrons of the bazaar became aware of a commotion and pressed around a certain booth. The Earl of Hitesbury stood near by pulling a pale blond and puzzled whisker

"Miss McRamsey has fainted," some one explained

That's why Doan's Kidney Pills are so effective

Here's a Bristol case to prove it:

John Breslin, 628 Spruce St, Bristol, Pa, says: "I had attacks of backache for five years and I could not do my work with any comfort. The kidney secretions were filled with sediment and passed far too frequently. I had tried many remedies in an endeavor to get relief, but all to no avail. A fellow-workman finally told me to use Doan's Kidney Pills, saying that they had cured him of a similar trouble. I took his advice and was greatly pleased with the benefit I obtained. As soon as I began using Doan's Kidney Pills, I felt better and it was not long before every symptom of my trouble had been disposed of."

The Wife of Talleyrand.

Of the wife of Talleyrand who was a beautiful but stupid woman many stories are told not all of them edifying. One quoted by the author of "Talleyrand the Man," is of a trip which husband and wife took to Lyons when, as they were crossing a bridge madame asked the name of the river which flowed underneath. Talleyrand explained that it was the Saone. "The Saone!" she replied. "What an odd change of pronunciation! They call it the Seine in Paris!" A few weeks later one of their guests was the dramatist Lemercier who regaled the company after dinner with passages from his plays. "Beginning a new act, he announced, 'The scene is at Lyons.'" Mme de Talleyrand who had been dozing in her chair suddenly sat up. "There!" she said to her husband. "You see I was right. You would call it the Saone!"

Brother Dickey Says:

She Wanted Bath.

The matinee performance was about half over when a distracted looking woman with a curly haired youngster of six sought out the man in the box office.

"There are boxes on your chairs in there," she began, "and they say drop a nickel in and get a box of candy."

"Yes, I see," asserted the man in the box office.

"Well," she continued indignantly, "I dropped a nickel in for my little girl."

"And couldn't you get the candy?" queried the box office man. "Wait; I'll see if we can get it out."

"Oh, yes," answered the woman; "I got the candy all right, but I couldn't get the nickel out."

And to the ticket man at least this remark furnished a more dramatic moment than any in the play.—Louisville ...

Dean Swift and the Cook.

"Moderation in all things is the best precept for everyday life. There is a good story about Dean Swift apropos of the value of never overdoing anything

The dean's cook one day overroasted the leg of mutton for dinner, and in consequence she was summoned to the dining room. "Cook," said the dean in a pleasant voice "this leg of mutton is overdone; take it back and do it less."

"Impossible your reverence!" exclaimed the cook

"Well" replied her master "supposing it had been underdone, you could easily have done it more."

"Certainly your reverence"

"Then" said the dean, "let this be a lesson to you. If you commit a fault always take care that it is a fault which will admit of a remedy."

The Duration of a Dream

One evening Victor Hugo was dictating letters to his secretary. Overcome by fatigue, the great man dropped into a slumber. A few moments afterward he awoke, haunted by a dream which, as he thought, had extended over several hours and he blamed his secretary for sitting there waiting for him instead of wakening him or else going away. What was his surprise when the bewildered secretary told him that he had only just finished writing the last sentence dictated to him

Goodness.

Whatever mitigates the woes or increases the happiness of others is a just criterion of goodness, and whatever injures society at large or any individual in it is a criterion of iniquity. MAY BE SCHOOL CODE IN HOUSE

After the Educational Measure Is Disposed of the Good Roads Bill Will Be Taken Up, to Be Followed by the Revenue Raisers.

By ROBERT HAIGHT.

Harrisburg, Pa., March 21 — Both branches of the legislature have so far made rapid progress in clearing the calendars of the vast number of minor bills relating to different subjects affecting the counties, and the decks are now pretty well cleared and ready for the receipt of the big measures, which it is calculated will cause considerable debate and consume a great amount of time.

The education committees of both houses, which have been holding joint hearings on the school code, have now concluded their labors and this voluminous measure has now been reported to the house. It is anticipated that this bill will meet with all kinds of opposition and that it will be loaded down with amendments which will almost completely change its appearance before the house gets through with it, and its authors fear that these changes may be so radical as to cause its hold-up when it reaches the senate. In the latter body several amendments will also be tacked on to the measure, one of the most radical of these being the proposition to have the election of members of the board of education in cities of the first class subject to recall in the event of their actions not meeting the views of the voters. It is not believed that this suggestion can be adopted, but it will no doubt be persistently fought for by the advocates of the initiative, referendum and recall theory of government, as they believe the adoption of the recall in the school code would be an entering wedge for the eventual adoption of this form all along the line of government.

The next bill of importance to be staged will be that commonly known as the Sproul-Jones good roads bill, which has been under consideration of the house committee on public roads for several weeks past and which has been favorably reported to the house. This measure is almost as voluminous as the school code and is equally as important to the rural sections of the state. It provides for the construction of a complete system of highways to be built and maintained at the sole expense of the state, connecting the county seats and the border line counties with the adjoining commonwealths. There are 203 different routes, embracing more than 5000 miles of roads, provided for in the bill, and care has been taken in the provisions of the bill to have these so designed that future legislatures can add to these routes with ease. In addition to the main bill carrying these provisions into effect there is also a resolution pending to permit an amendment to the constitution to authorize a bond issue of $50,000,000 to be used for this purpose. Both the bill and the resolution have the unqualified backing of Governor Tener and the administration leaders, and it is not believed that they will meet with any great opposition in either branch of the legislature.

Revenue Raising Bills.

It is the thought of the leaders that by the time these two big measures are disposed of the new revenue raising bills will be ready for action. THE GIRL AND THE HABIT

Tale of the Transition of a Restaurant Cashier

By O. HENRY

Copyright, 1910, by Doubleday, Page & Co.

Habit—A tendency or aptitude acquired by custom or frequent repetition.

The critics have assailed every source of inspiration save one. To that one we are driven for our moral theme. When we fevied upon the masters of old they gleefully dug up the parallels to our columns. When we strove to set forth real life they reproached us for trying to imitate Henry George, George Washington, Washington Irving and Irving Bachelier. We wrote of the west and the east, and they accused us of both Jesse and Henry James. We wrote from our heart, and they said something about a disordered liver. We took a text from Matthew or—er—yes, Deuteronomy, but the preachers were hammering away at the inspiration idea before we could get into type. So, driven to the wall we go for our subject matter to the reliable old, moral, unassailable vade mecum—the unabridged dictionary.

Miss Merriam was cashier at Hinkle's. Hinkle's is one of the big downtown restaurants. It is in what the papers call the "financial district." Each day from 12 to 2 Hinkle's was full of hungry customers—messenger boys, stenographers, brokers, owners of mining stock, promoters, inventors with patents pending and also people with money.

The cashiership at Hinkle's was no sinecure. Hinkle egged and toasted and griddlecaked and coffeed a good many customers and he lunched (as good a word as dined) many more. It might be said that Hinkle's breakfast crowd was a contingent but his lunch on patronage amounted to a horde.

Miss Merriam sat on a stool at a desk inclosed on three sides by a strong, high fencing of woven brass wire. Through an arched opening at the bottom you thrust your waiter's check and the money while your heart went pitapat.

For Miss Merriam was lovely and capable. She could take 45 cents out of a two dollar bill and refuse an offer of marriage before you could—Next—lost your chance—please, don't shove. She could keep cool and collected while she collected your check, give you the correct change with your heart indicator the toothpick stand and rate you to a quarter of a cent better than Bradstreet's could in a thousand in less time than it takes to pepper an egg with one of Hinkle's casters.

There is an old and dignified allusion to the "effete light that beats upon a throne." The light that beats upon the young lady cashier's cage is also something fierce. The other fellow is responsible for the slang.

Every male person of Hinkle's from the A. D. T. boss up to the curbstone brokers, adored Miss Merriam. When they paid their checks they wooed her with every wile known to Cupid's art. Between the meshes of the brass railing went smiles, winks, compliments, tender vows, invitations to dinner, sighs, languishing looks and merry banter that was wafted pointedly back by the gifted Miss Merriam.

There is no doubt that age more effective than the position of young lady cashier. She sits there, easily queen of the court of commerce. She is duchess of dollars and dukes, countess of compliments and coin, lending lady of love and luncheon. You take from her a smile and a Canadian dime and you go your way encomplaining. You count the cheers word or two that she tosses you as misers count their treasures and you pocket the change for a five uncomputed. Perhaps the brass-barred accessibility multiplies her charms. Anyhow she is a short waisted angel immaculate from tortoise-shell side fire bright eyed ready note-paper Circe and Ate in one, scorning you from your circumambient and after your sirloin and pie.

The young man who broke bread at Hinkle's never settled with the cashier without an exchange of badinage and open compliment. Many of them went to greater lengths and dropped promissory hints of theater tickets and chocolates. The older men spoke plainly of orange blossoms, generally withering the figurative petals by after allusions to Harlem flats. One broker who had been squeezed by copper proposed to Miss Merriam more regularly than he ate.

During a brief luncheon hour Miss Merriam's conversation, while she took money for checks would run something like this.

Good morning Mr Hankins—sir?—it's natural think you—don't be quite so fresh. Hello Johnny—then, fifteen, twenty—chase along now or they'll take the letters off your cap. Beg pardon—count it again, please—oh, don't mention it. Vaudeville?—thanks not on your moving picture—I was to see Carter in 'Hoddy Gabler' on Wednesday night with Mr Simmons. Excuse me, I thought that was a quarter. Twenty-five and seventy-five's a dollar—got that ham and cabbage habit yet? I see, Bills. Who are you addressing? —say, you'll get all that's coming to you in a minute. Oh, fudge! Mr Bassett—you're always fooling—no? Well, maybe I'll marry you some day—three, four and sixty-five is five. Kindly keep them remarks to yourself if you please. Ten cents?—excuse me, the check calls for seventy—well, maybe it is a one instead of a seven. Oh, do you like it that way, Mr Saunders?—some prefer a pomp, but they say this Cleo de Merody does suit refined features—and ten is fifty. Hike along there, buddy; don't take this for a Coney Island ticket booth. Huh?—why, Lacy's—don't it fit nice? Oh, no, it isn't too cool—these lightweight fabrics is all the go this season. Come again, please—that's the third time you're tried to—what?—forgot it—that head gearings is an old friend of mine, thirty-five?—must have had your salary raised, Mr. Wilson. I seen you on Sixth avenue Sunday afternoon, Mr. De Hinsdale—oh, my!—who is she? What's the matter with it?—why, it ain't money—what—Columbian half?—well, this ain't South America. Yes, I like the mixed best—Friday?—awfully sorry, but I take my jujutsu lesson on Friday—Thursday, then. Thanks—that's sixteen times I've been told that this morning—I guess I must be beautiful. Cut that out, please—who do you think I am? Why, Mr. Westbrook—do you really think so?—the idea!—one-eighty and twenty's a dollar—that's you ever so much, but I don't ever go automobile riding with gentlemen—your aunt?—well, that's different—perhaps. Please don't get fresh—your check is 15 cents. I believe—kindly step aside and let—Hello, Ben—coming around Thursday evening?—there's a gentleman going to send around a box of chocolates, and—forty and sixty is a dollar, and one is two."

About the middle of one afternoon the dizzy goddess Vertigo, whose other name is Fortune, suddenly smote an old wealthy and eccentric banker while he was walking past Hinkle's on his way to a street car. A wealthy and eccentric banker who rides in street cars is—move up, please; there are others.

A Samaritan, a Pharisee, a man and a policeman who were first on the spot lifted Banker McRamsey and carried him into Hinkle's restaurant. When the aged but indestructible banker opened his eyes he saw a beautiful vision bending over him, with a pitiful, tender smile, bathing his forehead with beef tea and chafing his hands with something frappe out of a chafing dish. Mr McRamsey sighed, lost a vest button, gazed with deep gratitude upon his fair preserveress and then recovered consciousness.

To the Seaside Library all who are anticipating a romance! Banker McRamsey had an aged and respected wife and his sentiments toward Miss Merriam were fatherly. He talked to her for half an hour with interest, not the kind that went with his talks during business hours. The next day he brought Mrs McRamsey down to see her. The old couple were childless. They had only a married daughter living in Brooklyn.

To make a short story shorter, the beautiful cashier won the hearts of the good old couple. They came to Hinkle's again and again. They invited her to their old fashioned but splendid home in one of the East Seventies, Miss Merriam's winning loveliness, her sweet frankness and impulsive heart took them by storm. They said a hundred times that Miss Merriam reminded them so much of their lost daughter. The Brooklyn matron, nee Ramsey, had the figure of Buddha and a face like the ideal of an art photographer. Miss Merriam was a combination of curves, smiles, rose leaves, pearls, satin and hair tonic posters. Enough of the fatuity of parents.

A month after the worthy couple became acquainted with Miss Merriam she stood before Hinkle one afternoon and resigned her cashiership.

"They're going to adopt me" she told the bereft restaurateur. "They're funny old people but regular dears. And the swell home they have got! Say, Hinkle, there isn't any use of talking, I'm on the a la carte to wear brown duds and goggles in a whiz wagon or marry a duke at least. Still, I somehow hate to break out of the old cage. I've been cashiering so long I feel funny doing anything else. I'll miss jawing the fellows awfully when they line up to pay for the buckwheats and. But I can't let this chance slide. And they're awfully good, Hinkle. I know I'll have a swell time. You owe me nine sixty-two and a half for the week. Cut out the half if it hurts you Hinkle."

And they did. Miss Merriam became Miss Ross McRamsey. And she graced the transition. Beauty is only skin deep, but the nerves lie very near to the skin. Nerve—but just here will you oblige by perusing again the quotation with which this story begins?

The McRamseys poured out money like domestic champagne to polish their adopted one. Milliners, dancing masters and private tutors got it. Miss—er—McRamsey was grateful, loving and tried to forget Hinkle's. To give ample credit to the adaptability of the American girl Hinkle's did fade from her memory and speech most of the time.

Not every one will remember when the Earl of Hitesbury came to East Seventy — street, America. He was only a fair to medium earl, without debts, and he created little excitement. But you will surely remember the evening when the Daughters of Benevolence held their bazaar in the W—f. A—a hotel, for you were there, and you wrote a note to Fannie on the hotel paper and mailed it, just to show her that—you did not? Very well, that was the evening the baby was sick, of course.

At the bazaar the McRamseys were prominent. Miss Mer—er—McRamsey was exquisitely beautiful. The Earl of Hitesbury had been very attentive to her since he dropped in to have a look at America. At the charity bazaar the affair was supposed to be going to be pulled off to a finish. An earl is as good as a duke—better. His standing may be lower, but his outstanding accounts are also lower.

Our ex young lady cashier was assigned to a booth. She was expected to sell worthless articles to nobs and snobs at exorbitant prices. The proceeds of the bazaar were to be used for giving to the poor children of the slums a Christmas din— Say did you ever wonder where they get the other 364?

Miss McRamsey—beautiful palpitating, excited charming radiant—fluttered about in her booth. An imitation brass network with a little arched opening fenced her in.

"YOUR CHECK, PLEASE."

Along came the earl, assured delicate, accurate, admiring—admiring greatly—and faced the open wicket.

"You look charming, you know 'pon my word you do, my dear," he said beguilingly.

Miss McRamsey whirled around.

"Cut that joshing out," she said coolly and briskly. "Who do you think you are talking to? Your check, please Oh, Lordy!"

Patrons of the bazaar became aware of a commotion and pressed around a certain booth. The Earl of Hitesbury stood near by, pulling a pale blond and puzzled whisker.

"Miss McRamsey has fainted," some one explained.

The Wife of Talleyrand.

Of the wife of Talleyrand, who was a beautiful but stupid woman many stories are told not all of them edifying. One quoted by the author of "Talleyrand the Man," is of a trip which husband and wife took to Lyons when, as they were crossing a bridge madame asked the name of the river which flowed underneath. Talleyrand explained that it was the Saone. "The Saone!" she replied. "What an odd change of pronunciation! They call it the Seine in Paris!" A few weeks later one of their guests was the dramatist Lemercier who regaled the company after dinner with passages from his plays. Beginning a new act he announced "The scene is at Lyons." Mme de Talleyrand who had been dozing in her chair, suddenly sat up. "There!" she said to her husband. "You see I was right. You would call it the Saone!"

Brother Dickey Says:

Der ain't a lazy bone in Satan's body an' right dar is what he sets de worl' a good example.

Never say d'it de devil's in de weather. Ef he wuz in it you'd sho' burn up long befo' yo' time.

No matter how de ol' worl' rolls, I'm gwine wid it, an' it does me de most eest good ter think I'm gettin' a free ride ever' day in de year.—Atlanta Constitution.

She Wanted Both.

The matinee performance was about half over when a distracted looking woman with a curly haired youngster of six sought out the man in the box office.

"There are boxes on your chairs in there," she began, "and they say drop a nickel in and get a box of candy."

"Yes, I see," asserted the man in the box office.

"Well," she continued indignantly, "I dropped a nickel in for my little girl."

"And couldn't you get the candy?" queried the box office man. "Wait; I'll see if we can get it out."

"Oh, yes," answered the woman; "I got the candy all right, but I couldn't get the nickel out."

And to the ticket man at least this remark furnished a more dramatic moment than any in the play.—Louisville Times.

The kidney secretions were filled with sediment and passed far too frequently. I had tried many remedies in an endeavor to get relief, but all to no avail. A fellow-workman finally told me to use Doan's Kidney Pills, saying that they had cured him of a similar trouble. I took his advice and was greatly pleased with the benefit I obtained. As soon as I began using Doan's Kidney Pills, I felt better and it was not long before every symptom of my trouble had been disposed of."
